Mercurius Utrecht, 1658–1669

Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht (c. 1622–1698) was one of the most resilient newspaper publishers of the seventeenth century. The nobleman had made his living as the author and publisher of three different newspapers in The Hague between 1654 and 1658.<sup>1</sup> His unique qualities as newsman at the heart of the Dutch state allowed Van der Macht to present to his readers the rich political gossip which passed through The Hague. But this gossip was occasionally too inventive or confidential for the local regents, and Van der Macht was banned from The Hague on 5 April 1658.<sup>2</sup> For around one month, we know nothing of his whereabouts. It is certain that Van der Macht did not lie low; nor did the sentence in any way persuade him to abandon the news trade. Within two months of his banishment Van der Macht had settled in Utrecht, only a day's travel from The Hague via Leiden and the Woerden canal. Here, by the beginning of June, he re-started his bi-weekly newspaper.<sup>3</sup>

The Utrecht Mercurius was the first newspaper to appear in Utrecht since Adriaen Leenaerts's short-lived Nieuwe Courante of 1623.<sup>4</sup> It was closely modelled on Van der Macht's newspaper in The Hague, the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius (1655–1658). Like its predecessor, the Utrecht Mercurius appeared as a quarto pamphlet with eight pages (a full sheet), with consecutive pagination and signature statements. Some issues featured a large woodcut of a flying mercury on the title-page—identical to the woodcut used on the title-page of the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius. In 1658 the Utrecht Mercurius was published on Mondays and Fridays, but in 1659 Van der Macht changed to Mondays and Thursdays, his preferred publication days from his time in The Hague.

The Utrecht Mercurius was intended by Van der Macht as a direct continuation of his newspaper in The Hague. The Mercurius was sold by Hendrik (II) Hondius, Van der Macht's former agent in The Hague, and one can presume that the former subscribers of the Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius were informed by the summer of 1658 of the new Utrecht venture.<sup>5</sup> The sources of Van der Macht's foreign news had changed very little. He continued to offer in his bi-weekly issues an assortment of around twenty news reports with a vast geographical range, with a generous 2,600 words of text in each issue. Van der Macht usually opened with several reports from Constantinople or the Mediterranean (Heraklion, Xante, Malta and Algiers), and then covered in systematic fashion the Italian Peninsula, Vienna or Austria, the Baltic and Scandinavia, the Holy Roman Empire, France, London and the Low Countries. Although Van der Macht's coverage declined a little in its range in the later 1660s, the courantier brought with him to Utrecht an impressive network of correspondents.

Just over 10% of the likely total number of issues of the Mercurius has survived for the eleven years of its existence.<sup>6</sup> Of the 134 extant issues, the majority date from 1666 and 1667, and are found in The National Archives in Kew (seventy-seven issues). Other issues are located in Wolfenbüttel, Gdańsk, Stockholm, Utrecht, Copenhagen, St Petersburg, London, Göttingen, Ghent, Leiden, Amsterdam, The Hague and Dublin. No issues survive for the years 1662–1664 and 1668–1669.

Van der Macht continued to intersperse the publication of the bi-weekly issues of the Mercurius with irregular topical news pamphlets which could accommodate longer narratives on significant events. The topical issues were numbered, signed and paginated as part of the regular series, but carried no regular title. This was a practice unique to Dutch newspaper publishing, which Van der Macht had adopted in The Hague since 1655. The vast majority of these single-subject issues were composed of a full sheet of eight pages, but others totalled four, twelve or sixteen pages. They frequently consisted of translations of foreign ordinances or letters, interspersed with Van der Macht's own commentary. They incorporated the latest details on the lives of the great potentates of the European world: coronations, illnesses, unexpected recoveries and deaths provided popular material. Speeches by foreign dignitaries, the canonisation of a Cardinal, civil unrest or the executions of notable criminals also featured prominently.

The irregular pamphlets appeared frequently in the first years of Van der Macht's career in Utrecht. Most surviving issues from 1658 and 1659 are topical issues rather than regular bi-weekly issues. However, Van der Macht stopped producing these irregular issues from the mid-1660s onwards. No such issues have survived between 1665 and 1667, despite the fact that the early topical issues survive very well. Many can be found in multiple copies in different libraries: the topical content of the irregular issues meant that they were more likely to survive in Sammelbände of contemporary political pamphlets.

Why did Van der Macht cease publication of the irregular topical issues? These issues served to provide readers with longer and more detailed reports, but this function was increasingly made redundant by competing forms in the news market. By the 1660s many newspapers had expanded in content and periodicity, accommodating longer speeches, proclamations and debates on a bi- or tri-weekly basis; and annual historical reviews, which tapped into similar sources as the irregular news serial, became more popular during the 1650s and 1660s, not least because of the success of the annual Hollandse Mercurius, published in Haarlem.<sup>7</sup> It took a shrewd and dynamic entrepreneur like Van der Macht to sense this transition and to shift his efforts accordingly.

For his first ten years as courantier in Utrecht Van der Macht resided on the Kromme Nieuwegracht, opposite the Paushuize, a magnificent dwelling built in the early sixteenth century for Adriaan Florensz, later Pope Adrian VI, who hailed from Utrecht. On 7 April 1667 Van der Macht notified his readers and correspondents that he moved to the Mariaplaats, in the "Poort" (gate), next to Procurer Van Sande.<sup>8</sup> It is noteworthy that throughout his tenure in Utrecht Van der Macht continued to publish under the pseudonym of "Anthony Benedicti". On the imprint of the Mercurius Van der Macht pretended that "Anthony Benedicti" printed the Mercurius "for the author"—a conceit he had also made use of in The Hague. At the start of his time in Utrecht he also used the pseudonyms "Jan van Swol", "the widow of Jan van Swol", "Anthoni Pieters", and "Anthoni Philiberti".<sup>9</sup>

Nevertheless, the pseudonym was by this point little more than a literary device. Van der Macht's true identity and reputation were well known, especially in the news market. On 12 July 1659 the Amsterdam courantier Otto Barentsz Smient published a lengthy tirade against Van der Macht in his Courante uyt Italien.<sup>10</sup> It seems that Van der Macht had slighted Smient in one of his publications; Smient responded that Van der Macht was a poor courantier for hiding under his pseudonym; and ended with a stern warning for the magistrates of Utrecht, whom he said would one day lament their employment of a disreputable man who "affronted honourable people". Smient also expressed his astonishment that Van der Macht had become "courantier of the Mercurius" in "fourteen days"—a reference to Van der Macht's swift installation in Utrecht.

It is indeed interesting that the magistrates of Utrecht took so kindly in 1658 to an expelled courantier with a reputation for bribery and fabricated stories. Perhaps the prospect of an experienced newspaper publisher moving to Utrecht was a tempting consideration to the Utrecht magistrates. For most of the seventeenth century the city had relied on newspapers from Amsterdam. Now that periodicals were emerging rapidly in cities like Haarlem and The Hague, Utrecht risked falling behind. A newspaper could be a source of local pride and reputation as much as information. Indeed, the few advertisements placed in the Mercurius were largely aimed at local citizens: the sale of a local house, the regulation of the local postal service, or the services of Utrecht apothecaries and doctors. Van der Macht was not appointed as official courantier; neither did he apply for a licence to publish (unlike a future Utrecht courantier, Broer Appelaer).<sup>11</sup> Instead it seems that the magistrates welcomed Van der Macht with a watchful eye. After all, Holland's law was not Utrecht's law.

In the Mercurius Van der Macht maintained the provocative editorial style which had so antagonised the regents in The Hague. While Van der Macht could no longer bribe clerks of the Court of Holland or frequent the offices at the Binnenhof, he continued to test the norms and standards of the seventeenth-century newspaper. Van der Macht railed against foreign opponents, and devoted more coverage to domestic affairs than his competitors. Throughout the Second Anglo-Dutch War it was particularly English writers and pamphleteers who felt his scorn in the pages of the Mercurius. Van der Macht revelled in printing "English lies” in order to undeceive his readers.<sup>12</sup> One of Van der Macht’s Dutch rivals, the courantier Joannes Naeranus, was also in the crosshairs. Naeranus was forced to print a retort in his Rotterdam newspaper after Van der Macht published an exposé on the arrest of Naeranus by a bailiff of the Court of Holland. This, Naeranus, assured his readers, was a total fabrication; Naeranus denounced Van der Macht as a printer of “pasquilles and false letters”, and also condemned his unwillingness to use his own name on his publications.<sup>13</sup>

From the mid-1660s Van der Macht began to test the patience of his protectors in the Utrecht magistracy. On 13 November 1665 Van der Macht was banned from publishing and printing the Mercurius; in their sentence the magistrates alluded to the frequent complaints they had received concerning the insulting tone of his newspaper.<sup>14</sup> It seems that Van der Macht still published his next issue, on 16 November, but lay low afterwards.<sup>15</sup> At the start of January 1666 Van der Macht was allowed to publish once more, but he did receive a further warning. Within less than two years, on 16 December 1667, the Mercurius was banned once again (from 1 January 1668 onwards), this time for a report on a resolution made by the States of Utrecht to discharge a number of troops on their payroll.<sup>16</sup> This report had made the States subject to “suspicions and hatred”. Van der Macht was again allowed to publish his newspaper on 10 February 1668, after he had apologised to the magistrates, and demonstrated that he had sought to correct publicly in his newspaper the mistakes he had made.<sup>17</sup> In addition Van der Macht complained that his affairs had suffered over the winter—he clearly depended on his newspaper for most of his income.

Indeed, at first sight Van der Macht does not seem to have diversified his investments or publications, in the way that so many courantiers in Amsterdam, Haarlem or Rotterdam had done. Beyond his newspapers and his news serials, few publications are directly ascribable to his press by name. Nevertheless, it turns out that Van der Macht was responsible for a variety of troublesome pamphlets. In the mid-1660s the Court of Holland began to investigate the publication of several anonymous political tracts circulating in The Hague. After interrogating close to a dozen booksellers in The Hague, the Court gathered a corpus of thirteen anonymous pamphlets which had all been printed and published by Van der Macht in Utrecht.<sup>18</sup> These abusive texts, not his newspaper, became his downfall. The scope of the case built against the courantier, and his previous transgressions, prompted the authorities of Utrecht to stand alongside their colleagues in The Hague. On 22 December 1669 Van der Macht was banned from Holland, Zeeland and Utrecht for life, ending his career as newsman and polemicist—and bringing down the curtain on a dynamic chapter in the history of the seventeenth-century Dutch press.<sup>19</sup> He lived on until 1698, but played no further part in the book world.

NB.

The full title of the Mercurius was initially the Mercuriale Maendaeche / Vrydaeche Ordinare Advysen Behelsende Historische Geschiedenissen, jongst van tijt tot tijt in Europa voorvallende. Van der Macht changed this in 1659 to the Maendaeche / Donderdaeche Mercurius Behelsende Historische Geschiedenissen, jongst van tijt tot tijt in Europa voorvallende, and in 1660 to the Maendaeche / Donderdaeche Mercurius.

I have only inferred approximate dates for lost issues between 1658 and 1660 due to the patchy survival of the series and complications introduced by the addition of the irregular topical pamphlets. I have also not inferred beyond the last known issue of each of these years.

Ordinaire Donderdaeghsche Europese Courant Utrecht, 1659–1667

Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht (c. 1622–1698) was one of the most productive courantiërs of the seventeenth-century Dutch Republic. In 1659, whilst publishing the bi-weekly Mercurius, he started a second newspaper.<sup>1</sup> From at least 1659 Van der Macht published the Ordinaire Donderdaeghsche Europese Courant, which appeared weekly on Thursdays. Similar to his other ventures, Van der Macht did so under the pseudonym of “Anthony Benedicti”. Fifteen surviving issues of this newspaper have been identified between 1660 and 1667—a survival rate of only 3%.<sup>2</sup> At first sight this rare newspaper comes across as a bibliographical puzzle. What would prompt Van der Macht to start a second newspaper, and to publish it on Thursday, the same publication day as his bi-weekly Mercurius?

The answer to this dilemma lies, I think, in the format and size of the Ordinaire Donderdaeghsche Europese Courant. The weekly appeared as a double-sided half-sheet folio, in the traditional style popularised by the Amsterdam newspapers in the first half of the seventeenth century. The Mercurius, in contrast, was a folded pamphlet of eight pages, composed of a full sheet of paper.

Thus far Van der Macht had published all his newspapers and serials in this pamphlet format. While the pamphlet format was the standard of newspaper publication in the Holy Roman Empire, France, Italy and England (up to 1665), it was more wasteful in its use of paper due to the margins required for folding. The broadsheet format preferred by most Dutch and Flemish courantiërs was perhaps less elegant than the pamphlets, and not as well suited to binding or preservation, but it did reduce paper costs. The half-sheet folio newspapers were always printed with very tight margins, and no paper was wasted on title-pages.

As a result, Van der Macht could fit into the Ordinaire Donderdaeghsche Europese Courant almost as much content as he could in the larger Mercurius. Most issues of the Mercurius contained 2,500–2,700 words; the Ordi- naire Donderdaeghsche Europese Courant, at half the size, contained 2,100–2,200 words. The average number of reports in the Ordinaire Donderdaeghsche Europese Courant was seventeen per issue; in the later 1660s the average number of reports in the Mercurius was just over eighteen.<sup>3</sup>

With the lower production costs of the Ordinaire Donderdaeghsche Europese Courant Van der Macht could market this weekly to a different audience. While the prices of Van der Macht’s newspapers in Utrecht are unknown, half-sheet folio newspapers in the Dutch Republic never cost more than a stuiver—while Van der Macht had sold his Haegsche Weekelycke Mercurius (1655–1658), a full sheet pamphlet, in The Hague for two stuivers.<sup>4</sup>

With the Ordinaire Donderdaeghsche Europese Courant Van der Macht offered potential customers a cheaper alternative to the Mercurius. To most Dutch citizens belonging to a broad middling class of artisans, a newspaper subscription was a relative indulgence. By presenting two variant publications, one appearing twice a week and marketed to the wealthier news reader; the other to the occasional, aspiring news reader, appearing on a weekly basis, Van der Macht could broaden his market. At the same time, Van der Macht did not have to invest more capital in his network of correspondents: in the Ordinaire Donderdaeghsche Europese Courant he offered largely the same reports as in the Thursday issue of the Mercurius, but somewhat redacted. Sometimes reports from Paris, London or The Hague published in the Ordinaire Donderdaeghsche Europese Courant would date from one or two days earlier than those published in the Mercurius—Van der Macht made sure that the freshest news was saved for readers who paid for the more costly pamphlet. While Van der Macht was a remarkably gifted polemicist and news gatherer, this exceptional newspaper is also evidence of his keen entrepreneurial spirit.

The suspension handed out by the Utrecht magistrates to Van der Macht from 17 November 1665 until 4 January 1666 will certainly also have affected publication of

<sup>3</sup> I inspected all fifteen surviving issues of the Ordinaire Donderdaeghsche Europese Courant, and 88 out of 103 surviving issues of the regular bi-weekly issues of the Mercurius.

the Ordinaire Donderdaeghsche Europische Courant.<sup>5</sup> It is unsure, however, whether Van der Macht was still publishing this weekly by the time he received a second ban in January 1668.<sup>6</sup> The final known issue of the Ordinaire

Donderdaeghsche Europische Courant dates from 27 January 1667. In any case, the newspaper will not have survived Van der Macht's expulsion from Utrecht in December 1669.

Hpt Spaengien en van den Paus sijn gzoore wilschen nae Duytslandt gheremitteert tot den Cuerschen Oorlogh / de Franse Volcken zyn aen t marcheren na 't Duytsche Rijch / en sal sijn koninck: Maj, om beter disciplijn onder deselve Volcker te houden / acsienlijke gelt remissen vooz desel. alle maenden vrezdonneren / en dieg halven gorde Commissarissen bp deselve stellen. 't is dan oock te weten / dat van 't Rijch (weeder lande Volckeren, als namelijch Alhantie / en vzwillige / sich in een bysonderen Corps / het een van 19000. 't ander van 24000 man / sal ghesonden en onderhouden werden. Soo dat uyt het Rijch eff. & te ober de 60000 mannen bp een sal gebzacht werden.

Frankfurt dito. Delwijlen Cheur-Beperen nu van Hegensburgh vretroeken is / soo ppareert sich sijn Cheur Fursteliche Doozt: van Vopelbergh om naer Hegensburgh te reysen. Que de Hazarnis noch tot Hagenau / 't Franse secours sal tot Binsack / Straetsburgh en Philipsburgh over den Rhijn trecken / en soo tegen de Donau op Alm en voorder na Weenen.

Londen den 11 dito. Het Parlement befoigneert pebertigh met groote concordantie, ende eendrachtighert / ende welbedaf van de Maj. Den Graef van Wiltol was noch niet te binden / maer doer onderusschen seer krachtighe instantien bp gheschryfte / om onder byp. gelyp sijn sacche staende te houden / en te defenderen / maer sekerelijch dese saetle siet verders. Onse Vloot soude vooz Tanget gheagriveert zyn. Men deliberert over de Ligue ter Zee tegens de Coszatte Nooberg.

Paris 12 dito. Alle dagen verwachten sententie, van die het seeret beleydt van dit Hof om gelt vercocht heeft. Dit stuk heeft 't proces van den Heer Fouquer gepostposeert, niet dat hem eenige verhoopingte te gemoet gevoght wort, want hier houmen voor een vasten regel, dat die 's Coninex ofte 's Laits goederen seelt, ofte anmaticht, zonder verschooninghe, strengelijc strafbaert is, gelijk niet een maer verscheide exempelen beroont hebben. Binnen 4 of 5 dagen reylt het Hof na buyten, om sich te reetereen. Daer vallen dagelijc noch klachten vande Nederlandische Natic, ter zaecke vande exorbitantie ontroot 't Vadigelt, soo dat den Nederlandischen Minister sich volwerex vint, misgaders verscheide andere dingen. Men equipeert hier sterck aen de nieuwe Oost-Indische Compagnie Schepen, 't welck metter tijt van die sijde al mede bresse inde Nederlandische Navigatie, schijnt te zullen maken. De Inwoonders van Casana, hebben oock een ooght in 't zeyl te houden, daerle in hare vreesame possessie te gerufter blyven. Men spreekt dat hier zeer nootzakelijc dienen geenregistreert, ende gheverifieert de Tradaten met de Nederlanders, want niets, ofte het siet, en heeft reflectie bp de Commetie, en Navigatie, en sonder de verficatie desselz inde respectie Parlementen, soo is de rechte vrucht, en gewenschte ruste, voor de Nederlanders niet wel te volgen. Van Cahs is tydinghe, dat aldaer een Amsterdams Oorloghs-Schip, sijnde een Convoyet Schip-breucke geleden heeft, was met tweed andere op de bancken gezeyle, dewelcke noch los geraecht zyn, d'Officieren en Scheeps-volck was geberght. De Troopes volonairt voor Duytschlandt zyn marschveerdigh.

Ceulen den 13 dito. Den Paus sent aen Keyserl: Maj 13000 man / waer van bp 4000 onderhouden sal / daer beneben heeft bp aen sijn Keyserl: Maj: 2 wissele op 120000 Croonen gemitteert. Den koninck in Byzantijch heeft tot de voozgaende 6000 man / noch 4000 daer by te doen be-looft / ende daer bp 300000 Croonen. De Airt-bolckeren sullen haest bp een gebort werden, wij-

Haegse Post-Tydingen

The Hague, 1663–1677

By 1663 Adriaen Vlacq (1600–1667) was a seasoned courantier.<sup>1</sup> The mathematician had been a newspaper publisher in The Hague for a decade: he took over publication of the Wekelycke Nieuws (1652–1655) in 1653, and in 1656 established the bi-weekly Post-Tydingen uyt 'sGraven-Hage.<sup>2</sup> When Vlacq first entered the newspaper business he had found a highly competitive market. The Hague was a rapidly expanding centre of news, and the news trade was booming. This was exploited by several innovative, if controversial courantiers, who adopted for their papers a pamphlet format ostentatiously different from the established norm of the former newspaper capital, Amsterdam. But since the summer of 1658 and with the banishment of Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht (c. 1622–1698), Vlacq was the only courantier left in The Hague. Rather unexpectedly he had the local newspaper market to himself.

In 1663 Vlacq decided to expand. A contract with the bookseller Pieter Aertsen (fl. 1663–1667) stipulated that Vlacq would deliver half his print run to Aertsen for distribution in Amsterdam.<sup>3</sup> The costs of publishing and distributing the newspaper would be shared equally between the two bookmen; if Vlacq or Aertsen wanted to cancel the contract then he would have to reimburse his partner 200 gulden. There was a further specification to the contract: Vlacq would now print his newspaper on Tuesdays and Thursdays (instead of Mondays and Thursdays) and he would do so “in the format and manner of the Amsterdam and Haarlem newspapers”.<sup>4</sup> This new venture was to be the Haegse Post-Tydingen.

Thus far Vlacq, like other newsmen in The Hague, had printed his newspapers in the quarto pamphlet format, similar to the newspapers published in the Holy Roman Empire, England and France. In the Dutch Republic this style had been pioneered in The Hague; but it had not spread to Amsterdam and Haarlem, the two great newspaper cities, where newspapers traditionally appeared on both sides of a half-sheet folio. Vlacq had long been eyeing this market: he first entered into a sales agreement with an Amsterdam bookseller in 1653, when Gillis Joosten Saeghman (1619–1704) undertook to distribute Vlacq's Wekelycke

Nieuws. But by the 1660s it had become clear to Vlacq that in order to compete in the profitable but competitive Amsterdam news market, a newspaper from The Hague would have to appeal to the tastes of Amsterdam customers. The partnership between Vlacq and Aertsen is testament to the lasting importance of Amsterdam in the Dutch news market, as well as the capacity of courantiers to establish a foothold in the capital. Similar contracts would be established between courantiers in Rotterdam, Weesp and Leiden and booksellers in Amsterdam in the 1660s and 1680s.<sup>5</sup>

The first issue of the Haegse Post-Tydingen appeared on Tuesday 2 January 1663. The earliest surviving example dates from Thursday 5 July of the same year. The final known issue dates from Thursday 28 October 1677. A total of 273 issues (including one variant, two special issues and three illicit reprints) have survived for the fifteen years of publication, a low survival rate of around 5%. Most extant issues can be found in Kew (130 issues), Moscow (97 issues) and Bremen (51 issues), with others scattered between Amsterdam, Oldenburg, Haarlem, The Hague, Arnhem, Wolfenbüttel, Oxford and Berlin.

From 1664 the newspaper carried a small woodcut of the arms of The Hague at the top of each issue. This was a development in tune with other newspapers: the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant and the Amsterdam Courante uyt Italien featured similar woodcuts from 1662 onwards. The use of the woodcut was a source of authenticity as much as a mark of identity and local pride, and would later also be found on newspapers in Rotterdam, Utrecht and Leiden. As agreed in the contract between Vlacq and Aertsen, the Haegse Post-Tydingen initially appeared on Tuesdays and Thursdays, although between 1665 and the summer of 1671 the partners experimented with publication on Tuesdays and Fridays before reverting back to the original schedule.

Vlacq may have been a seasoned courantier, but he was not a true news specialist. He was above all a mathematician and a scholar, and a widely published author before he became a book publisher in The Hague. Even when building his news business Vlacq continued to dedicate significant efforts to the publication of scholarly texts. Throughout the final five years of his life he published at least fifty-five titles, ranging from his own mathematical treatises to astrological and medicinal tracts, political commentaries, cookery books, classics and news pamphlets.<sup>6</sup> This was a shrewd diversification of Vlacq's business as well as a reflection of his intellectual interests, but the content of the Haegse Post-Tydingen definitely suffered as a result. Vlacq's issues contained on average only nine reports per issue—compared to over twenty reports in the issues of his rivals in Amsterdam, Haarlem and Utrecht.<sup>7</sup> Vlacq used a larger typeface than his competitors, and in some ways the Haegse Post-Tydingen resembled more the size and lay-out of Dutch newspapers from the 1630s and 1640s than the 1660s.

Vlacq's range of sources was relatively restricted, albeit consistent. He usually opened the newspaper with reports from Naples and Venice or Rome; on Fridays he would publish reports from Madrid, Genoa and Paris; on Tuesdays one could always find a report from Vienna; and most issues ended with reports from London, Hamburg and then several Dutch cities (Amsterdam, Haarlem, Rotterdam and The Hague). These domestic reports often occupied half of the issue, and it is likely that Vlacq invested more in local sources than in an international network of correspondents (again, unlike his rivals in Haarlem or Amsterdam).

The Haegse Post-Tydingen also featured fewer advertisements than its competitors.<sup>8</sup> A third of surviving issues include an advertisement, compared to over three-quarters of issues published in Amsterdam and Haarlem in the 1660s and 1670s. The Haegse Post-Tydingen featured book advertisements from The Hague, Amsterdam, Leiden and a few other cities, but seems to have relied more than usual on regular customers. The apothecary and oculist Johannes van Duren (in Rotterdam) advertised at least eight times in the Haegse Post-Tydingen between 1666 and 1673.

Regardless of its limited content, the Haegse Post-Tydingen was popular enough to be copied and reprinted illegally. Three reprints, dated from 27 August 1666, 4 March 1667 and 1 April 1667, can be found mixed in with genuine copies of the newspaper in the National Archives in Kew. All three mimic the style and format of the Haegse Post-Tydingen. Nevertheless, none of the three pretend to be an authentic issue: each states that it was printed "after the copy by Adriaen Vlack".

This act of piracy seems to have been part of a carefully planned operation. The editor of the reprint clearly invested in the venture, given that the two reprints from 1667 included a woodcut emblem of The Hague closely modelled on the original woodcut of the Haegse Post-Tydingen. The earliest surviving reprint was a verbatim reproduction, and included all news reports present in the original published by Vlacq. However, the reprint of 4 March 1667 contained some differences; although it repeated news reports from Madrid, La Rochelle, Paris, Dover, London, Hamburg and Antwerp, it ignored others, and added new reports from Rotterdam, Middelburg, Stockholm, Edinburgh, Venice, Rome, Genoa and Naples not in the original. Publishing these additional reports required editorial investment, and suggest that the perpetrator was a news publisher as well. It is uncertain where he operated: perhaps in nearby Leiden, or even Amsterdam. Sadly, no complaints by Vlacq regarding illegal reprints have survived, unlike complaints by Abraham Casteleyn in Haarlem and Joannes Naeranus in Rotterdam, who both found their newspapers reprinted in Amsterdam.<sup>9</sup>

Adriaen Vlacq died in early April 1667. The final issue of the Haegse Post-Tydingen with his imprint dates from 25 March 1667, but the illegal reprint from Friday 1 April still claimed to copy Vlacq's newspaper, which makes it likely that Vlacq died around this time. On Tuesday 5 April the newspaper appeared in much the same fashion, but it was now published by Crispijn Hoeckwater (1642–1731), living on De Poten in the "Groene Tent" (green tent). At the end of this issue Hoeckwater announced that Vlacq had passed away, and that his widow had expressed no interest in continuing the venture. Hoeckwater had therefore petitioned to take over the newspaper; he assured his readers that he would endeavour to maintain a high standard of credible and accurate news reporting.

Crispijn Hoeckwater was the son of an Amsterdam merchant, and had established himself as a bookseller and publisher in The Hague a year earlier, in 1666.<sup>10</sup> He did not own a printing press, and had the Haegse Post-Tydingen printed by the local printer Levijn van Dijck (fl. 1662–1694). Hoeckwater was only twenty-five years old, but the magistrates of The Hague must have been convinced of his talents as a courantier: the succession was not uncontested, as Johannes Rammazeyn (c. 1619–1693), publisher of the Wekelycke Nieuws (in 1652 and 1653) and the printer of the Wekelycke Mercurius (1654), also petitioned to publish the Haegse Post-Tydingen at Vlacq's death.<sup>11</sup> Clearly the magistrates preferred the young Hoeckwater over the older Ram-mazeyn, whose last periodical venture had been banned in 1654.

Hoeckwater had a rough start. On 13 May, just over a month after his appointment as courantier, he was fined 1,200 gulden and banned from publishing for six weeks by the Court of Holland.<sup>12</sup> In his issue of 10 May 1667, a copy of which can be found in the archive of the Court of Holland, Hoeckwater placed a news report to which the Court took offence. Hoeckwater claimed that the States General offered to mediate peace between France and Spain in the Southern Netherlands. This was a speculative report, repeating a rumour that Hoeckwater (as he confessed to the Court of Holland) had overheard in the Court itself.<sup>13</sup> He admitted that he frequented the Court daily to gather additional news for his periodical. Hoeckwater appealed to the judges to repeal the sentence shortly after it was handed out. In this he was successful, and the fine was never paid; given his ready confession, the sentence is probably best interpreted as a stern warning to the young publisher. After an interval of several weeks, the Haegse Post-Tydingen resumed publication on 17 June.

After this false start Hoeckwater engrossed himself in his new position. It became clear that he was a more dedicated courantier than Vlacq had been. Hoeckwater kept up with the times, and made several editorial changes in line with developments in Haarlem and Amsterdam. He began to use smaller typefaces for the publication of the Haegse Post-Tydingen, and organised his news reports under geographical sections. Within a couple of years the number of reports increased substantially to an average of fourteen per issue.<sup>14</sup> Hoeckwater regularly published two or three reports from Paris, two reports from London, and also expanded the range of reports from the Holy Roman Empire and the Italian Peninsula. Unlike Vlacq, Hoeckwater did not diversify his business interests beyond his career as courantier. Only twenty-four other publications are known by Hoeckwater between 1666 and 1686.<sup>15</sup> Except for one tract on astronomy (published in 1678), all are short news pamphlets and political commentaries.

While it seemed that Hoeckwater had turned around the fortunes of the Haegse Post-Tydingen, the newspaper came to a sad end in the later 1670s. Hoeckwater had a troublesome home life, leading to a divorce in the early 1680s.<sup>16</sup> The courantier was also investigated by the local authorities for the publication of seditious pamphlets in 1669, 1672 and 1679, a complication that would have impacted on the fortunes of the newspaper.<sup>17</sup> Hoeckwater's newspaper issue dated from 7 August 1674 was confiscated by the States of Holland for seditious reporting, and the Haegse Post-Tydingen was banned once more, this time for a period of six months.<sup>18</sup> Again Hoeckwater appealed, and he resumed publication by 6 November. From mid-1675 the surviving issues hint at an irregular schedule of publication: issue number 62 of 1675 was published in October (instead of August), and number 20 of 1677 appeared in July (instead of March). The final known issues do not carry a number, and it seems that by the end of 1677 Hoeckwater was struggling to keep the paper going. While the last known publication by Hoeckwater dates from 1686, it is probable that the Haegse Post-Tydingen was last published during the 1670s.

The Haegse Post-Tydingen was the final Dutch newspaper to appear in The Hague in the seventeenth century. With the appearance of a tri-weekly newspaper in Leiden in 1686 readers in The Hague would have had access to plenty of newspapers from the rest of the country. Nevertheless, The Hague continued to grow as a centre of news and publishing, and the emergence of another Dutch newspaper in The Hague was only a question of time. Crispijn Hoeckwater lived in The Hague until his death in 1731 (at the ripe age of eighty-nine), and would probably have read issues of the tri-weekly's Gravenhaegse Courant published in the town from 1708 onwards by Anthoni Pauw.<sup>19</sup>

NB.

Due to an irregular schedule of publication and inconsistent numbering I have not inferred lost issues for the Haegse Post-Tydingen between 1670 and 1677.

Bruges, 1672

On 30 June 1666 the magistrates of Bruges ordered the booksellers Alexander Michiels (?–1677), Lucas vande Kerchove (1618–1675) and the widow of Joannes Clouwet (?–1686) to present themselves at the town hall. The magistrates had a complaint: too many newspapers were printed in Bruges. Michiels, Vande Kerchove and Clouwet each published a weekly newspaper, but, according to the magistrates, they were of poor quality. In a town of only 30,000 inhabitants (the majority of whom would not have had the means or interest to buy a newspaper) the competition had had undesirable consequences. Evidently the three courantiers tried to protect profit margins by cutting costs on production, rather than by investing to improve the content of their newspapers. The magistrates would no longer tolerate this situation. The three booksellers were invited to submit offers to buy a licence, guaranteeing a monopoly on newspaper publication in Bruges—the highest bid would win.<sup>1</sup> Henceforth there would only be one newspaper in Bruges.

The magistrates did not state how long this objectionable state of affairs had continued; as we will see, it is extremely difficult to establish when any of these three newspapers first appeared. Nevertheless, it is certain that by 1666 Bruges was one of the most competitive newspaper centres in Europe. Throughout Europe most courantiers operated as the only newspaper publisher in their town. This was more often than not at the instigation of the publishers themselves, who demanded a monopoly to protect their investment. In the second half of the seventeenth century magistrates too intervened to regulate the publication of newspapers more closely; in order to maintain standards of publication, like the Bruges magistrates, but also to exercise oversight over content.<sup>2</sup> But the magistrates of Bruges had been slow to enforce any form of licensing before 1666. The first Bruges courantier, Nicolaes Breyghel (?–1669), had published his Nieuwe Tydinghen uyt verscheyde ghewesten from 1637 until at least 1660 without a formal license.<sup>3</sup> The lack of regulation in Bruges created new opportunities around the time of Breyghel's final years as newspaperman.

<sup>2</sup> See for example the 1654 ruling by the Amsterdam burgomasters, forcing the remaining four courantiers to share publication days. See chapters 1–2, 15–16 and 43.

The three new courantiers were prominent figures and rivals in the Bruges book trade. Lucas vande Kerchove, the son of the Ghent printer Jan vande Kerchove, had arrived in Bruges in 1640, setting up shop with his siblings Jan-Baptist and Katharina.<sup>4</sup> Alexander Michiels entered the booksellers' guild in 1647. The widow of Joannes Clouwet had worked in her husband's bookshop from the later 1630s or 1640s. When her husband died in 1657 she decided to expand the business, and from at least 1662 she also managed her own printing press.<sup>5</sup> The three printers were located a stone's throw from one another: Michiels and Clouwet both had their premises in the Breidelstraat, the main thoroughfare connecting the commercial and political centres of the city, the Great Market square and the Burgh. Vande Kerchove was located on the corner of the market square. Bruges was not a major centre in the international book trade, and all three publishers competed in the same local market for Catholic devotional texts, commissions to publish municipal and ecclesiastical ordinances, and other jobbing print. Of the three only Michiels had definitive newspaper experience. Before he entered the booksellers' guild in 1647 he was an apprentice in the shop of Nicolaes Breyghel, where he would undoubtedly have assisted in the production of his Nieuwe Tydinghen uyt verscheide ghewesten.<sup>6</sup>

When did Michiels, Vande Kerchove and Clouwet first publish their weekly newspapers? Already in 1657 the accounts of the Bruges treasury detail a payment to Michiels, Vande Kerchove, and "other printers and booksellers" for "various things printed for the city and the delivery of weekly gazettes".<sup>7</sup> Michiels and Vande Kerchove frequently printed ordinances and forms for the town council, but this reference does not provide proof that Michiels and Vande Kerchove were also printing newspapers by 1657. It is equally possible that at this point the delivery of newspapers referred to newspapers printed elsewhere; and it is highly likely that Nicolaes Breyghel was still printing his weekly Nieuwe Tydinghen uyt verscheide ghewesten and delivering these to the council, and was one of the "other printers and booksellers" in this particular reference.<sup>8</sup> Indeed, payments by the magistrates in the later 1650s and early 1660s do name Nicolaes Breyghel in connection with the delivery of newspapers, again with

Michiels and Vande Kerchove. Later payments also mention the widow Clouwet and the booksellers Pieter Roose and Pieter van Pee.<sup>9</sup>

These opaque references from the municipal accounts create only an ambiguous timeline for newspaper publication in Bruges. Given that the widow Clouwet did not have a printing press before 1662, she will not have been able to print a newspaper before that year; but Michiels and Vande Kerchove may have done so, especially after Breyghel ceased publication of his newspaper around 1660. What is certain is that Alexander Michiels published a newspaper from at least 1664. A fragment of one of his newspaper issues from that year has survived, and is now held in the municipal library in Bruges. The title and date of publication of this issue are unknown, but judging by the content and dating of the news reports it was most likely published in early September.

The only other repository of Bruges newspapers from this period is the British National Archives in Kew, which holds a collection of twenty-six Bruges newspapers published in 1666 and 1667. These include issues of the newspapers of Michiels (six issues), Vande Kerchove (ten issues), and the widow Clouwet (ten issues). This collection reveals that the three courantiers published their newspapers on separate days. The widow Clouwet published the Nieuwe Wekelicksche Gasette, Ofte Extraordinaire Nieuwe Tydingen uyt verscheide Ghewesten on Tuesdays; Vande Kerchove published the Woensdaghsche Tijdinghen uyt verscheide Ghewesten on Wednesdays; and Michiels published the Nieuwe Vrijdaghsche Tijdingen. Wt verscheide ghewesten on Fridays.

All three newspaper took stylistic inspiration from Nicolaes Breyghel's Nieuwe Tydinghen uyt verscheide ghewesten. The titles all cleave close to Breyghel's original, and the design and structure of the newspapers is similar too. All three Bruges titles appeared as double-sided folio sheets (half a sheet of paper), with two columns of news reports on each side. Michiels' Nieuwe Vrijdaghsche Tijdingen and Clouwet's Nieuwe Wekelicksche Gasette featured a thin frame around the edges and between the columns, similar to Breyghel's newspaper. The three courantiers all used a large black letter typeface for the main body of their issues, and cursive or roman typefaces for datelines and headers. At a time when most Netherlandish newspapers replaced their black letter typefaces with smaller roman type, this gives the Bruges newspapers an old-fashioned appearance. The extant issues contain around 1,100–1,300 words; the Amsterdam or Haarlem newspapers of the same period offered their readers double that amount. The three Bruges courantiers tapped into similar news networks. Each publisher had good connections with the British Isles and the Dutch Republic, usually offering two or three reports from both regions in every issue. Cádiz, Madrid, Venice, Rome, Livorno, Vienna, Hamburg and Cologne also feature regularly in all three newspapers. Reports from France, the Baltic or Eastern Europe are less common. Most extant issues contain no more than eight reports, a modest number compared to rival titles across the Low Countries.

After they had been informed of the resolution of the Bruges magistrates on 30 June 1666, the three courantiers deliberated amongst themselves. None of them felt confident enough to make a bid alone, so on 22 July they presented a counter-offer to the magistrates.<sup>10</sup> They would apply for the newspaper monopoly as a consortium. Each courantier would continue to publish their separate newspaper, but to cut down the total production, they would alternate publication (see table 35.1). On the first week one of the three courantiers would publish two newspaper issues, appearing on Tuesday and Friday. The second courantier would publish on the same days the following week, followed by the third courantier in the third week. This proposal was accepted by the magistrates, on condition that the newspapers would be inspected before publication by the secretary of the treasury, Jacob Talbout. The three courantiers also paid 48 gulden, 6 stuivers and 8 penningen into the coffers of the city's fund for the relief of the poor.<sup>11</sup>

Seven issues of the three newspapers survive for the period after this arrangement was agreed upon. These indicate that the courantiers made no obvious changes to the design, lay-out or content of their newspapers. Rather confusingly each courantier also kept their own numbering sequence, which they restarted with the new schedule.<sup>12</sup> The only notable adaptation was a change in title. Henceforth Vande Kerchove entitled his newspaper Gazette, Oft Nieu-Tijdinghen uyt verscheide Steden en Landen, and Clouwet entitled her newspaper Nieuwe Brughsche Gasette, Ofte Extraordinaire Tydinghen uyt verscheide Quartieren. Clouwet's final extant issue was entitled Courant Ofte Extraordinaire Wekelicksche Tydingen, uyt verscheide Quartieren. In order to help their readers follow the new schedule, the publishers placed a notification in their newspaper at the end of their allocated week to indicate where next week's issues were to be found. On Friday 13 August the widow Clouwet stated that "the following week the newspapers will be printed by Lucas vande Kerchove"; on 20 August Vande Kerchove wrote that "next week the newspapers will be printed by Alexander Michiels".<sup>13</sup>

The settlement was agreeable to the Bruges magistrates, but at least one of the courantiers regretted the arrangement soon afterwards. On 11 February 1667 the widow Clouwet petitioned the Privy Council in Brussels for an exclusive licence for newspaper publication in Bruges—a request which would, if successful, have driven her colleagues out of the market.<sup>14</sup> This was rejected, and the three courantiers continued to alternate publication in the established fashion; if there were hard feelings between the tough-minded widow and her male partners, this did not induce any of them to walk away from the arrangement.

Despite the lack of surviving issues after 1667 we can be sure that the three licensed courantiers continued to publish their bi-weekly newspapers into the 1670s. In 1672 the Privy Council in Brussels asked the magistrates of Bruges to supply details of the courantiers active in the city.<sup>15</sup>

<sup>12</sup> For example, Lucas vande Kerchove published his issue number 4 on 20 August, but issue number 6 three weeks later, on 11 September (issue number five would have been published on Tuesday 8 September). See also Van Impe, 'Nieuwe gegevens', pp. 255–256.

At this point the consortium was still active, because the magistrates asked Michiels, Vande Kerchove and Clouwet to submit a copy of their printing licenses as proof of their right to print newspapers.

During the course of this investigation it turned out that the Bruges bookseller Pieter Roose (?–1678) had recently also started to publish a newspaper. Hardly anything is known about this venture. It is not even certain whether this newspaper was part of the established consortium, or whether he was working on his own. The second is more likely: if he had been a partner of the three established printers, we would probably have heard more of him.<sup>16</sup> Roose is known to us as a bookseller in Bruges during the 1660s and 1670s, but he is not otherwise known to have published books on his own account. If he did, none of these publications have survived. We can only assume Roose's newspaper was a short-lived opportunist attempt to capitalise from the evident local success of the consortium's publications, which Roose would most likely have sold in his own shop. Roose did not possess a licence for his newspaper, and the magistrates immediately prohibited him from printing any more issues. But this archival record is enough to earn him a place in the roster of Flemish newspaper publishers. This is one of two occasions where we can document a newspaper for which not even one issue has survived, though examples occur more frequently in other parts of Europe, particularly the Holy Roman Empire.<sup>17</sup>

On 10 July 1672 the magistrates of Bruges reprimanded Michiels and the widow Clouwet for publishing their newspapers without prior inspection, and reminded them to submit their issues to the secretary of the treasury or to one of the two burgomasters of the town.<sup>18</sup> In April 1674 the Brussels courantier Adrien Foppens complained about the publication of newspapers in Bruges, which he believed infringed his monopoly on newspaper publishing throughout the Habsburg Netherlands.<sup>19</sup> The magistrates of Bruges refused to prohibit their three courantiers from publishing their newspapers, promising to look into the matter in the future. After 1674 the publication of the three Bruges newspapers becomes more uncertain. Vande Kerchove and Michiels died in 1675 and 1677 respectively. The widow Clouwet died in 1686, and her business passed to her sons Maximilien and Grégoire. Trace of the newspapers disappears with the passing of the courantiers. Perhaps the magistrates did follow up on their promises to the Privy Council.

In 1717, thirty-one years after the death of the widow Clouwet, memory of the three courantiers and their consortium had faded. When the Bruges stadsdrukker Andreas Wydts submitted a petition to start a newspaper, the Council of Flanders rejected his proposal, astonished that he had wished to do so. The councillors reminded him that newspapers had never before been published in Bruges.<sup>20</sup> The idea that the citizens of Bruges could have bought three different newspapers only fifty years previously seemed very distant; clearly these small local papers had left little imprint on the collective civic consciousness. The next Bruges newspaper would not appear until 1792, and then of course in very different circumstances.<sup>21</sup>

Oprechte Donderdagse Courante Weesp, 1666

On 21 August 1665 the Amsterdam publisher Samuel Imbrechts (1631–1679) signed a contract with the printer Mattijs Perfect (1620–?).<sup>1</sup> The two men had come up with a shrewd plan: they would start a weekly newspaper in the nearby town of Weesp. The magistrates of Amsterdam regulated the production of newspapers in Amsterdam, and Imbrechts, who was the chief financier of the partnership, knew that he would not be permitted to publish a newspaper there. By turning to the small town of Weesp, less than two hours from Amsterdam, Imbrechts could circumvent the regulation.

The contract stipulated that Perfect would move to Weesp, using a loan of 195 gulden from Imbrechts. In Weesp Perfect would set up a print shop and print a weekly newspaper, all for an unspecified wage paid by Imbrechts. He would send the copies of the newspaper to Imbrechts in Amsterdam, who would be charged with the distribution from his shop in the Raamsteeg. Perfect would be obliged to pay 1.5 gulden to Imbrechts from every four gulden which he earned until he had paid back his loan. Perfect was not a wealthy entrepreneur, and his career in the book trade was limited to stints in Gouda and Amsterdam as a jobbing printer.<sup>2</sup>

The two partners published the first issue of the Oprechte Donderdagse Courante on 25 February 1666. This is the only surviving issue of this hitherto undocumented Weesp newspaper. The newspaper appeared in the same style as its competitors in Amsterdam, The Hague and Haarlem, as a half-sheet folio, printed on both sides. Oprechte (Authentic) was copied from the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant, by this point the most popular newspaper in the Dutch Republic.

The Oprechte Donderdagse Courante was not the first periodical to be published in Weesp. It was only a few years since Nicolaes Jacobsz had launched his Courante uyt Italien (1656–1660), intending to use Weesp as a publishing platform from which to enter the Amsterdam news market without requiring the consent of the Amsterdam burgomasters.<sup>3</sup> Weesp occupied an important gateway between Amsterdam and the east of the Dutch Republic, towards Utrecht, Gelderland and the Holy Roman Empire. One could reach Amsterdam from Weesp in under two hours by regular barge services.<sup>4</sup> The Oprechte Donderdagse Courante could be despatched each Wednesday evening or Thursday morning, ready to be sold on the Dam and in Imbrechts' bookshop by noon. In 1666, the only newspapers published in Amsterdam appeared on Tuesdays and Saturdays, leaving Thursday as an ideal day for this new venture.

Perfect and Imbrechts assembled an impressive array of reports for the first issue of the newspaper, seventeen in total. Comparing the Oprechte Donderdagse Courante to the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant and the Haegse Post-Tydingen published two days earlier on 23 February, it is clear that this Weesp venture did not source its news from competing titles. It is not a surprise that the first issue of the Oprechte Donderdagse Courante did not feature any advertisements. This was not because Weesp was considered too provincial by booksellers or local authorities to serve as an advertising platform; Nicolaes Jacobsz's Courante uyt Italien did include several advertisements placed by booksellers and local authorities, many of them in Amsterdam. Rather, publishers relied on their reputation as newspaper proprietor to persuade booksellers and other clients to contribute advertising content; a reputation which took some months, if not years, to build.

It is impossible to speculate on the longevity of the Oprechte Donderdagse Courante. We have no record of Mattijs Perfect after 1666, but Samuel Imbrechts remained active as a publisher in Amsterdam until his death in 1679. In all likelihood the venture lasted for a few years, but it may have been driven out of the market by the emergence in 1666 of the bi-weekly Oprechte Rotterdamse Zee-en Post-tijdingen, published on Thursdays, and the addition of a third issue, also published on Thursdays, of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant, in 1667. The single surviving copy of the Oprechte Donderdagse Courante does reveal the ease with which seventeenth-century newspapers were started—and the ease with which they have disappeared into obscurity. The Oprechte Donderdagse Courant is a unique survivor, but it will not have been one of a kind. It is highly likely that similar ventures emerged in other towns, great and small, which remain (for now) beyond our knowledge.

Oprechte Rotterdamse Zee-en Post-tijdingen Rotterdam, 1666–1668

The first newspaper to be published in the maritime centre of Rotterdam appeared in the summer of 1666, at the height of the Second Anglo-Dutch War and the “True Freedom” regime under the leadership of Grand Pensionary Jan de Witt. The Oprechte Rotterdamse Zee-en Post-tijdingen was published by one of the most controversial booksellers of this time, and was pursued during its brief lifetime by complaints, illegal reprints, and suspensions. It is also one of the more enigmatic newspapers of the seventeenth century. The most recent work on the Oprechte Rotterdamse Zee-en Post-tijdingen dates from 1871, when W.P. Sautijn Kluit published his article on the Rotterdam press.<sup>1</sup> Then, Sautijn Kluit was able to access only a few surviving issues dated from 1666. The discovery of 104 issues from 1666, 1667 and 1668 in The National Archives in Kew allows for a revised history of the newspaper.

On 24 April 1666 the bookseller Joannes Naeranus (c. 1609–1670) delivered a petition to the magistrates of Rotterdam, requesting the right to start a newspaper in the city.<sup>2</sup> Naeranus stated that it was widely known that courantiërs in Amsterdam and Haarlem had published newspapers for the benefit of their inhabitants “and those of other cities” for many years.<sup>3</sup> But, Naeranus argued, most of the news reports published in Amsterdam and Haarlem passed through Rotterdam. Naeranus boasted that he would be able to print those reports four days before they appeared in the Amsterdam or Haarlem press, “for the significant convenience and service not only of the inhabitants of this city, but those of neighbouring cities and provinces”.<sup>4</sup> He had already identified trusted correspondents in Italy, France, England and other regions. He wished to print on Tuesdays and Saturdays, the same days as his would-be rivals in Amsterdam and Haarlem.

The magistrates knew Joannes Naeranus well. He had been a bookseller in the city since 1634, located on the Steiger, near the corn market. Naeranus was born into a family of Remonstrant preachers, but he grew up as a young man at a time when Remonstrant doctrines were widely condemned and persecuted.<sup>5</sup> Under Frederick Henry’s tenure as Stadhouder (1625–1647) public attitudes towards Remonstrants became more tolerant. Naeranus was one of the first booksellers to publish openly Remonstrant devotional and theological works, including those of Johannes Wtenbogaert and Simon Episcopius, when most printers had only dared to do so under pseudonym. Naeranus was the most prominent Remonstrant printer in the Dutch Republic in the middle of the seventeenth century, combining personal piety with a keen commercial instinct. Throughout his career Naeranus would be responsible for close to 200 works; the majority were Remonstrant books, but he also developed an interest in the market for jurisprudence, literature and news. He played a pivotal role during the English Civil Wars in harnessing public opinion for the Royalist cause of King Charles I. Although many in the Dutch Republic sympathised with the King’s predicament, Remonstrants identified particularly closely with his struggle against the Parliamentary regime.<sup>6</sup> Naeranus was the first publisher to issue a Dutch translation of the Book of Common Prayer, and printed his own edition of the monumental Eikon Basilike. From 1664 Joannes Naeranus’ business was supported by his son Isaac (?–1713). Joannes had moved to a shop on the Lombardstraat around 1662, and Isaac took over the shop on the Steiger, “den Boekbinder” (the bookbinder). Although not as prolific a publisher as his father, Isaac continued the family tradition of Remonstrant publishing with success.

Joannes Naeranus also strayed into more perilous waters, and had frequent brushes with the law.<sup>7</sup> While his Remonstrant texts were disseminated freely, Naeranus’ revisionist history of the executed statesman Johan van Oldenbarnevelt in 1648 was quickly banned and confiscated.<sup>8</sup> Naeranus was especially enraged by this punitive action, because it had been a fellow bookseller, Pieter (I) van Waesberge, who had notified the authorities of Naeranus' activities.<sup>9</sup> Naeranus was also responsible for the printing of many anonymous pamphlets, including those written by his Remonstrant relatives.

In April 1666 the magistrates of Rotterdam consented to Joannes Naeranus' petition that he should be allowed to publish a newspaper.<sup>10</sup> They may have been wary of his turbulent record, but they also considered that a local newspaper would provide a useful service during these tempestuous times. After all, a Rotterdam newspaper would be uniquely poised to take advantage of the increased flow of urgent news during the Second Anglo-Dutch War. Many ships would come up the river Meuse to Rotterdam, or further south to nearby Hellevoetsluis, to bring the first news of the latest battles, skirmishes and prizes. While Dutch newspapers of the first half of the seventeenth century had largely looked towards the European landmass in the east, towards the great conflict of the Holy Roman Empire, now the theatre of war shifted to the west, out across the North Sea and beyond. Appropriately, Naeranus called his newspaper the Rotterdamse Zee-en Post-tijdingen (Rotterdam Sea- and Post-tidings).

The first issue was printed on Saturday 22 May. Although Naeranus had undertaken to issue his newspaper on Tuesdays and Saturdays, he actually published on Thursdays and Saturdays. The Zee-en Post-tijdingen appeared in the standard style of Dutch newspapers, as a half-sheet folio printed on both sides. Naeranus used a combination of roman, cursive and black letter typefaces, often printing the second page in a smaller roman or cursive type, but using the larger black letter for the front page.

Naeranus' news network was remarkably different from other courantiërs of his time: the Zee-en Post-tijdingen offered very little news from Europe's heartland, preferring instead the latest reports from its north-western outposts. But he could nevertheless offer as much news as his rivals in Amsterdam, Haarlem and Utrecht, and more than other competitors in The Hague and Weesp. The issues of the Rotterdam newspaper usually contained around sixteen to twenty reports, for a total of around 2,500–3,000 words. Almost every Thursday Naeranus offered to his readers a single report from Madrid, Rome, Venice, and sometimes a report from Milan or Naples; four or five reports from France, including two or three from Paris; two reports from London and a variety of dispatches from towns on the Southern English coast; one report from Vienna, and four or five reports from the Low Countries (often Ostend, Bruges, Antwerp, Ghent, Vlissingen, The Hague or Rotterdam). The Saturday (and later Monday) issues contained much the same, although they sometimes included more Mediterranean and German news.

In 1666 and 1667 the content of the Zee-en Post-tijdingen was dominated by the progress of the Second Anglo-Dutch War. The earliest surviving issues of the newspaper are two special issues published on the Four Days' Battle (11–14 June).<sup>11</sup> Naeranus devoted much of the back page of his issues to domestic reports of maritime news, often including reports from the Dutch fleet itself. On 8 July readers of the Zee-en Post-tijdingen could read a report from "Admiral de Ruyter's ship at Schooneveld"; a special issue detailing the St James' Day Fight of 4 August 1666 contained a report written by "a lieutenant on the ship of Colonel van Gent".<sup>12</sup> Undoubtedly such first-hand reporting was of immense news value. But reporting from the fleet at the height of war was a precarious business, and within two months of starting the Zee-en Post-tijdingen one of Naeranus' naval reports landed him in trouble.

In a report from "the fleet before the Thames" of 15 July, Naeranus reported that the admirals of the Dutch fleet had slackened their blockade of the Thames, allowing a Swedish ship to pass through in order to deliver a message to the British fleet.<sup>13</sup> More incendiary still, the report claimed that the Dutch admirals had toasted the health of King Charles II and his admirals. The States of Holland made a formal complaint to the magistrates of Rotterdam two days after this report was published in the issue of 22 July. On 29 July Naeranus offered an apology in his newspaper: he blamed the malicious and untruthful report on one Captain Wijnbergen, who had arrived on a ship sailing up the Meuse and told the same story to "various trustworthy people", promising that he had been present when the toast to the king and his admirals was offered.<sup>14</sup>

Naeranus got off lightly on this occasion, but more complaints followed two months later. On 18 September the magistrates of Hoorn were appalled that the Zee-en Post-tijdingen featured a report on the pitiable state of equipment for the fleet in Hoorn; two days later the Court of Holland notified the magistrates of Rotterdam that Naeranus had insulted the Viceroy of Scotland.<sup>15</sup> Patience was now exhausted, and three weeks after this the States of Holland instructed the magistrates of Rotterdam to suspend Naeranus as courantier because of his repeated detailed reports on the constitution of the nation's fleet.<sup>16</sup> The best maritime news came at a price.

Apart from the apology printed on 29 July for the seditious report on the fleet, we know little of Naeranus' reactions to the repeated complaints from Dutch authorities throughout 1666; or how the local magistrates communicated the various objections. We do know how he reacted to another threat to his new venture: the reprinting of his newspaper. Within a month of starting his newspaper, the Zee-en Post-tijdingen had become popular enough to warrant illicit reprinting by colleagues in the book trade. A special issue on the Four Days' Battle was reprinted anonymously around mid-June 1666.<sup>17</sup> There was little Naeranus could do to hinder pirating of such an issue given the extraordinary demand for news of the Dutch victory. More worrying, Naeranus discovered towards the end of July 1666 that an Amsterdam printer, Pieter Timmer, was systematically reprinting issues of the Zee-en Post-tijdingen.<sup>18</sup> Amsterdam, the largest news centre in the Dutch Republic, was a crucial market for any newspaper publisher. Naeranus had leased the sale of his newspaper in Amsterdam to the bookseller Pieter Adriaensz (fl. 1666–1668). Towards the end of the month Adriaensz wrote a disquieting letter to Naeranus, warning him that Timmer reprinted Naeranus' Thursday issue as soon as it arrived in Amsterdam, and brought it on the bourse by midday, when trading closed.<sup>19</sup>

At the end of his issue dated 31 July, Naeranus printed a general warning against his Amsterdam impostor, who called himself "Pieter Geest" (Peter Ghost) on the reprints:

All readers are warned that an evil-minded character in Amsterdam, called Geest, dares to print Rotterdamse Zee en Post-tijdingen, under the imprint of Pieter de Geest in Rotterdam, while only Joannes

Naeranus in Rotterdam has the consent of the burgo-masters and regents to print the Zee-en Post-tijdingen. In order to distinguish the authentic newspaper from its impostor, one will now find the arms of Rotterdam printed in the title.<sup>20</sup>

Indeed, this issue featured for the first time a woodcut of the coat of arms of Rotterdam in the centre of the title, a feature which Naeranus maintained for the remainder of the newspaper's publication. In addition, he requested the magistrates of Rotterdam to complain to their counterparts in Amsterdam about the infringements, which they did on 3 August.<sup>21</sup> It is uncertain whether Pieter Timmer was ordered to refrain from reprinting the Zee-en Post-tijdingen. Regardless of these measures, reprinting did not stop: the collection in Kew contains an anonymous reprint from 3 March 1667.<sup>22</sup> This issue copied around half the reports of the original issue from 3 March, and was also decorated with a crude woodcut of the coat of arms of Rotterdam. Laying the copies side by side, there is no doubt which was the authentic issue—but the citizens of Amsterdam buying a weekly paper may not have been particularly concerned to distinguish the authentic from the illicit.

After the instruction from the States of Holland dated 7 October 1666, Naeranus soon stopped printing the Zee-en Post-tijdingen, probably around mid-October.<sup>23</sup> Yet the newspaper was not yet at an end. From 13 November, Joannes' son, Isaac, took over the periodical, starting a new numbered sequence of issues. The newspaper changed little in appearance, and it seems that the Naeranus family simply moved the bi-weekly operation to Isaac's shop to satisfy the instructions of the States of Holland. After all, they had only asked for the suspension of Joannes, not for a ban of the newspaper. The only significant transformation was a change in the days of publication: the Zee-en Post-tijdingen appeared on Mondays and Thursdays from the start of 1667. On 4 April 1667 Isaac also replaced the coat of arms of Rotterdam with a new woodcut. By 25 July Isaac added a second woodcut, a personal insignia featuring the letters "I" and "N". On 25 July Isaac also changed the title of the newspaper to include the prefix "Oprechte" (Authentic), similar to the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant.

23 A fragment dated from 14 October (presumably issue 42), is the last surviving issues published under Joannes Naeranus' name in 1666.

The newspaper appeared under Isaac's name until at least 28 July 1667. Now the younger Naeranus found himself in troubled waters. The English ambassador present at the peace negotiations in Breda complained to his Dutch counterpart that "the Rotterdam courantier" had published an "insulting comment" in one of his latest issues.<sup>24</sup> The Dutch, delighted by their recent strategic advantages, were keen to finish the negotiations, and moved swiftly to communicate the ambassador's irritation. On 25 July and 28 July the States of Holland wrote once more to the magistrates of Rotterdam to reinforce the complaint, stressing in the second letter that they expected Isaac Naeranus to be punished.<sup>25</sup>

This affair resulted in a second suspension for the Zee-en Post-tijdingen, and Isaac's name disappeared from the newspaper. On 11 August the newspaper was restarted with a new numbering sequence. The prefix Oprechte had disappeared, and instead of the two new woodcut emblems the newspaper now featured the original woodcut first used by Joannes Naeranus. Furthermore, the imprint stated that the issues were printed "in Rotterdam, by Hendrik Haak". Haak is unlikely to have been a real printer, and was most probably a pseudonym used by Joannes Naeranus; the use of the original woodcut may suggest precisely this. On 22 September, after "Hendrik Haak" had published twelve issues, Joannes Naeranus revealed himself as publisher once more. The numbering sequence was started again, Oprechte returned to the title, and the woodcut was replaced by the two new emblems introduced by Isaac. With Isaac necessarily taking a lower profile, it seems that the newspaper was passed back from son to father. But before launching himself back into the venture, Joannes Naeranus wished to test the waters, preferring to hide for a month under a pseudonym before presenting himself again as courantier of the Zee-en Post-tijdingen.

The Oprechte Rotterdamse Zee-en Post-tijdingen enjoyed relative success, at least in terms of avoiding further trouble, until the autumn of 1668, but then its demise was swift. The coup de grace was delivered by the publisher himself, thanks to the placement of a particularly ill-considered advertisement. The Rotterdam newspaper had never been able to attract the same number of advertisements as its rivals in Haarlem and Amsterdam. Only around a third of extant issues contained an advertisement or public announcement.<sup>26</sup> Many of these advertisements were placed by father and son Naeranus themselves for their numerous political, literary and religious productions. A few others were placed by colleagues in the Amsterdam book trade, and the newspaper also included advertisements from Rotterdam brokers or citizens looking to sell their wares, art, books, business or house. The few public announcements in the newspaper concerned local crime, plague measures and postal routes.

Naeranus' disastrous advertisement was placed on 4 October 1668.<sup>27</sup> Three weeks earlier, he had reported in his newspaper that a Socinian publication written by the controversial Middelburg theologian Joannes Becius (1623–1690) and printed anonymously in his hometown, had been banned by the States of Zeeland.<sup>28</sup> Naeranus accompanied the report with the complete text of the edict prohibiting Becius' Apologia Modesta & Christiana. On 4 October, Naeranus advertised in his newspaper that the same tract was now available in a new edition printed by himself in Rotterdam: "in which is depicted the break between the author and the Reformed church, the same book which was for that reason banned from Middelburg and the island of Walcheren".<sup>29</sup> This blatant defiance of a prohibition Naeranus himself had publicised was not appreciated by the Court of Holland.<sup>30</sup> They were perplexed that Naeranus used the prohibition of the Apologia Modesta & Christiana as an advertisement for his own edition; and they ordered the magistrates of Rotterdam to move against him.

It seems that this time the magistrates accepted the need to act, and did so decisively. The final known issue of the Oprechte Rotterdamse Zee-en Post-tijdingen was published on 18 October. All trace of the newspaper disappears thereafter. Joannes Naeranus died two years later, in 1670, as a wealthy man with a house and possessions valued at 23,000 gulden.<sup>31</sup> His son Isaac remained active in the Rotterdam book trade until 1702. He would run into more trouble in September 1672, when he was arrested on suspicion of publishing a radical anti-Orangist tract.<sup>32</sup> Isaac was featured at least one advertisement; ten issues featured at least one public announcement.

26 I inspected 109 out of 112 surviving issues. Twenty-nine issues released after two months, undoubtedly a shaken man. Although it is possible that another Dutch newspaper was printed in Rotterdam in the 1680s, this is by no means certain, and no surviving issues have thus far been identified.<sup>33</sup> A French newspaper was to appear in Rotterdam by 1689, and another Dutch paper, a tri-weekly, not until 1738.

NB.

In April 1668 Naeranus skipped a number in the sequence, jumping from 28 to 30 or 29 to 31.

Zeelantsche en Haeghsche Post-Tijdinghe 1666

In the summer of 1666 the Second Anglo-Dutch War (1665–1667) was in full swing. The leadership of the Dutch Republic, headed by Grand Pensionary Jan de Witt, was eager to prove itself after a crushing defeat at the battle of Lowestoft in 1665. King Charles II had to build on the English success of 1665, knowing that funding granted by Parliament would run out in the event of a lengthy and unsuccessful war. As France joined the Dutch Republic in the conflict against England in 1666, English public support for an expensive naval war was wavering. A decisive battle was expected; victory was vital. In the course of the summer the opposing fleets would meet twice: at the Four Days' Battle (11–14 June) and the St James' Day Fight (4 August). Neither battle was conclusive—the Dutch gained the advantage at the former and the English at the latter—but the preparations, progress and aftermath of these engagements dominated the Anglo-Dutch news sphere for months on end.

While most of the content of seventeenth-century Dutch newspapers was made up of foreign reports, compiled at major centres of the European postal networks, news from the Dutch fleet trickled in to the many maritime towns of the Dutch Republic. Official dispatches were sent from various squadrons by commanders and admirals, but much more news was to be gathered from the rumours disseminating from fishing boats, merchant vessels or the docks. Many newspaper reports published in the summer of 1666 were gathered from domestic maritime locations: Vlissingen, Middelburg, Rotterdam, Den Helder, Vlieland, or Amsterdam. It is no surprise that shrewd entrepreneurs took their chance to make a quick profit out of the demand for news generated by the Second Anglo-Dutch War. The most notable venture to emerge in the summer of 1666 was the Oprechte Rotterdamse Zee-en Post-tijdingen.<sup>1</sup> The Zeelantsche en Haeghsche Post-Tijdinghe is an enigmatic newssheet from the same period.

The Zeelantsche en Haeghsche Post-Tijdinghe survives in a single issue in the National Archives in Kew. This paper, presented in the standard half-sheet folio style of Dutch newspapers, consists of six reports gathered from within the Dutch Republic, all concerning domestic naval and political news. The publication lacks a date, and the dating of the reports similarly lack the name of the month.

The news reports are from 23 “ditto”, followed by 26, 25, 24 and 26 “ditto”. An analysis of the content of these reports (regarding the movement of the Dutch fleet and the imprisonment of cavalry captain Buat in The Hague) suggests that the month of publication was August 1666.<sup>2</sup>

The imprint of the Zeelantsche en Haeghsche Post-Tijdinghe reveals only that it was printed by the pseudonymous “Pieter Jansen”. The location of the press is likewise a mystery. The title of the newspaper highlights the province of Zeeland as well as The Hague; both locations were hubs for incoming naval and political news. The Zeeland cities of Vlissingen and Middelburg both supported a lively print culture; if Pieter Jansen was in fact a Zeeland printer then this is the first news serial to emerge in Zeeland, predating the Middelburgsche Courant, published from 1758 onwards, by almost a century. On the other hand, The Hague enjoyed a larger readership and more efficient connections with other cities in Holland. The final report in the newspaper is datelined Utrecht: this provides yet another possible place of publication.

It remains a mystery whether the Zeelantsche en Haeghsche Post-Tijdinghe was a real newspaper, a temporary serial or a one-off publication. The title, lay-out and design of the paper indicate that the publisher at least attempted to mimic other periodical ventures, but the pseudonymous publisher and the absence of numbering and proper dating points away from a genuine newspaper. The focus on domestic naval and political news emphasises the exceptional circumstances of the summer of 1666, when reports and rumours of battle, treason, victory and defeat circulated widely throughout the Dutch Republic. Reporting news from the fleet, as the Zeelantsche en Haeghsche Post-Tijdinghe did liberally, was dangerous, but highly profitable. It is likely that the publisher of the Zeelantsche en Haeghsche Post-Tijdinghe was motivated to produce one, or a few, printed bulletins of news in the style of the conventional newspapers. These small sheets would provide a rapid return on investment, but without the potential pitfalls of closer supervision encountered by the established periodicals.

Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen

Ghent, 1667–1700

In early August 1666 the Ghent printer Maximiliaen Graet (c. 1625–1676) submitted a petition to the Habsburg Privy Council in Brussels.<sup>1</sup> Graet wished to start a newspaper, but wanted to secure the support of the highest authorities in the state before committing any financial investment. Ghent was the capital of Flanders and one of the key economic centres of the Habsburg Netherlands, but had never before had its own newspaper. In his petition Graet emphasised that he was encouraged by various “notable merchants and other persons” in Ghent to undertake this new venture, so that they could benefit from a local periodical press.<sup>2</sup> Graet also reminded the councillors in Brussels—somewhat robustly—that newspapers were already published in the great cities of Antwerp, Bruges and Brussels. It would be unjust to deny Ghent the same right.

The councillors in Brussels forwarded the petition to the Council of Flanders, the highest authority in the province.<sup>3</sup> For their part, the councillors of Flanders sent the petition to the magistrates of Ghent for their advice. The magistrates assured their superiors that Graet was well-equipped to publish a newspaper. He had been the local stadsdrukker since the 1650s, and was a prolific publisher with dozens of works to his name. Alongside his jobbing printing for the city, Graet published devotional tracts, plays, literature, jurisprudence, school books and news pamphlets, in Dutch, Latin, English and French.<sup>4</sup> Graet was assisted in his shop, “Den Enghel” (the Angel), by his wife, Jacoba de Somere, and their six children.<sup>5</sup>

On 17 November Graet was issued with a licence by the Council of Flanders which guaranteed the exclusive right to publish a newspaper in Ghent. Perhaps Graet launched the newspaper immediately; perhaps he waited for the New Year. It is certain that by the start of January 1667 the citizens of Ghent could buy copies of the bi-weekly Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen, published every Monday and Thursday. The earliest surviving issue dates from 21 February 1667, and up to 1700 a total of 442 issues have survived, mostly dated from the early 1670s and later 1680s. These are divided between two main holdings in Ghent (250 in the university library and 174 in the municipal archives), with other copies found in Kew and Brussels.

The Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen was initially published in the style of other Southern Netherlandish newspapers of the 1660s, as a double-sided folio (a half-sheet), printed in double columns. In 1669 the newspaper switched to a pamphlet format with four unnumbered pages (also a half-sheet), a style the newspaper would maintain for the rest of the century. Graet was an experienced printer, and the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen was produced with typographical and aesthetic sophistication. Initially Graet used a mixture of roman and black letter typefaces which guided the reader through each issue, highlighting datelines and the start of new stories within paragraphs of text. When the black letter disappeared in the later 1670s the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen adopted instead datelines and headers in full roman capitals or cursive type. At the start of 1674 Graet replaced the double columns on each page with a single column of reports. From this point onwards he also placed three woodcuts above the title: Mercury in the centre, flanked on the left by the arms of Flanders, and on the right by the arms of Ghent. The woodcuts disappeared in 1678, only to return in 1691 (with the arms of Flanders and Ghent switching sides). From 1697 the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen only featured a single woodcut of Mercury, but larger than the original.

From 1667 until April 1669 the issues of the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen were censored by councillor J. Gillemans, whose initials (I.G. L[ibrorum]. C[ensor].) were found at the end of the second page.<sup>6</sup> Henceforth no imprimatur was found on the paper, but it continued to be censored before publication: in 1672 the magistrates of Ghent told the Privy Council that aldermen Peeters and Claysson were appointed as censors.<sup>7</sup>

As it turned out, Maximiliaen Graet had not chosen a propitious moment to begin his new venture. In 1667 French armies invaded the Habsburg Netherlands in the War of Devolution (1667–1668). Although Ghent itself was not taken, it was blockaded by marauding forces and communications networks were severely disrupted. The Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen of 1667 contain frequent apologies for the late arrival of particular despatches, and in many issues the text is liberally-spaced to compensate for the lack of news. After the war the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen recovered, and could soon offer a respectable number of reports. Most issues were composed of 1,600–2,000 words. Graet maintained a relatively small but consistent network of correspondents, based in Madrid, Rome, Venice, Warsaw, Vienna, Frankfurt, Hamburg, London, Paris and The Hague; but he could certainly not match the newsgathering of courantiers in Amsterdam, Haarlem or Brussels.

Despite his prominence in the Ghent book trade, Maximiliaen Graet was not a wealthy man. Graet could only afford to buy his house “Den Enghel” in the mid-1670s, at the end of his life—and even then he still had to take out a loan.<sup>8</sup> When he died in 1676 his widow, Jacoba de Somere, took over the shop and the newspaper, but she too suffered from financial problems; she was often behind on payments for printing paper and pursued by creditors.<sup>9</sup> When De Somere died in 1682 the business continued in the hands of three daughters: Joanna (?–1710), Monica (?–1712) and Theresia (?–1713).<sup>10</sup> Passed on to other relatives in the 1710s, the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen came to an end around 1720 when its mounting unprofitability rendered it unsustainable.

The Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen may not have been a money spinner, but the family Graet were well respected in the local community, and could rely on the local magistrates to protect them from attempts by other printers to erode their privilege. On 12 September 1667 the Council of Flanders fined the Ghent printer Baudouin (II) Manilius 12 gulden for the apparent infringement of Graet’s monopoly.<sup>11</sup> When Maximiliaen Graet died in 1676 the printer Michiel Maes appealed to the Council that he should be allowed to take over the privilege from the widow, whom, he argued, would be unsuited to the position, for she was “ignorant of French and other foreign languages”.<sup>12</sup> For her part, the widow attached a letter to her petition for the renewal of the license signed by fifteen Ghent merchants, who stated that they found the tidings of the widow “as good in style, and as curious in content” as those of her husband.<sup>13</sup> In 1682, when the three daughters of Maximiliaen and Jacoba sought to continue the newspaper, the Ghent printer Jean de Dryvere pleaded in vain be allowed to publish the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen.<sup>14</sup>

Clearly a few colleagues in the book trade considered themselves better candidates for the role of courantier. Given the lack of investment capital available to the family Graet and their relatively small number of correspondents, this was quite possibly justified. Nevertheless, the councillors of Ghent stood squarely behind their newspaper. This was all the more evident in the staunch defence of the newspaper against the efforts of the Brussels courantier Adrien Foppens (1631–1695) to prohibit the publication of newspapers in Antwerp, Bruges and Ghent.<sup>15</sup> Foppens, who maintained a monopoly granted by the Privy Council of newspaper publication throughout the Habsburg Netherlands, demanded in the spring of 1672 that other newspapers ceased publication.<sup>16</sup> When the Privy Council asked the magistrates of Ghent about the publisher of their local newspaper, the councillors responded indignantly (and more fervently than those of Antwerp and Bruges) that Maximiliaen Graet not only enjoyed a privilege for his newspaper courtesy of the Council of Flanders, but that he sold his newspaper for only one stuiver, as opposed to Foppens’ expensive Relations véritables, which cost three stuivers. In 1674, when Foppens launched a rival Flemish periodical to appeal to Flemish readers in Antwerp, Bruges and Ghent, the magistrates of Ghent again refused to give up their local newspaper.

On 12 November 1681 the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen was banned by the Privy Council after publication of a report from The Hague which speculated on English diplomatic interference in the Habsburg Netherlands.<sup>17</sup> The newspaper received an indefinite suspension, but was reinstated on 3 December after the Council of Flanders explained that they were to blame for the report, rather than Jacoba de Somere. The Council acknowledged that the newspaper had been submitted to the censor for inspection in the usual fashion, but that the censor was otherwise occupied, and left the copy uninspected for some time on a pile of papers. When a messenger arrived to collect the copy, he thought mistakenly that it had already been approved, and took it back to the print shop.<sup>18</sup>

The most serious threat to the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen had come in 1678, when Ghent was taken by the forces of Louis XIV during the Franco-Dutch War (1672–1678). On 8 March French troops entered the city, and it seems that the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen briefly ceased publication. No issues have survived from the first two months of 1678, but on Monday 14 March Jacoba de Somere started a new sequence, with an issue numbered “N. 1.” This issue opened with an editorial statement by the widow, praising the King of France for his assault and “exceptional troops”, and the city of Ghent for its “brave and courageous defence”.<sup>19</sup> This was followed by the articles of surrender. Not many courantiers experienced the dangers of military occupation, and the accompanying destruction and unrest could have prompted Jacoba de Somere to cease publication. Nevertheless, she accommodated herself quickly to the new regime—it is notable that the imprint of the first March issue of 1678 no longer includes the statement “with privilege and licence of His Royal [Spanish] Majesty.” When the French departed later in the year, the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen reverted to its loyalist Habsburg stance.

What sustained the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen was the service it provided to the local community of regents, merchants and the wider professional class. This is evident above all from the advertisements and public announcements placed in the newspaper, especially towards the final decades of the seventeenth century. Most early advertisements in the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen were placed by the publishers themselves: for engravings, pamphlets and books available at “Den Enghel”. But advertisements placed in subsequent decades portray a lively urban commercial culture which gradually embraced the newspaper as a vehicle for publicity. Local surgeons, pharmacists and brokers placed advertisements; there were frequent announcements for plays, markets, barge times and the sale of houses. In contrast to the advertisements placed in the Dutch Republic, which tapped into a national market of information and commerce, the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen catered almost exclusively to the citizens of Ghent. As the magistrates of Ghent had so fervently demonstrated, the newspaper was an important local amenity and a potential means of generating profits—if not necessarily for its hard-working proprietors.

When the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen ceased publication around 1720, it would be several years until a new Ghent bi-weekly was started.<sup>20</sup> This, the Gazette van Ghendt, would last for two centuries, until the start of the Second World War. Despite the rocky history of the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen, the Ghent press stood on secure foundations.

NB.

The Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen were numbered sequentially from 1–104 (or 105) throughout the year, with the exception of 1668. In this year Maximiliaen Graet decided to number his paper in the manner of the Amsterdam and Haarlem newspapers of the time, with two concurrent series of numbers 1–52 for the Monday and Thursday issues rather than a single sequence. In 1669 he reverted to the original style.

I have chosen not to infer lost issues for the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen due to the numerous irregularities in the numbering and publication of the newspaper. These irregularities are, for most years, complicated further by the low survival rate. This has made it problematic to number lost issues, and to deduce whether an issue was skipped by the publisher or whether a number in the sequence was skipped or used twice. The only years for which I have inferred lost issues are 1688 and 1689, both of which have near-complete survival.

Amsterdamsche Courant Amsterdam, 1670–1700

In 1654 the magistrates of Amsterdam made a decisive intervention in the local news market. The four remaining courantiers were instructed to alternate publication, thus halving the number of issues published locally.<sup>1</sup> Instead of four weekly newspapers (two published on Tuesdays and two on Saturdays), the city now had four fortnightly newspapers, publishing alternatively on Tuesdays and Saturdays. The magistrates seem to have been unimpressed by the wild profusion of the previous decade; having made this change they refused to countenance the establishment of any new Amsterdam papers. This did not in fact restrict the availability of news in Amsterdam. It was beyond the power of the Amsterdam council to prevent papers published elsewhere being brought into the city, and very quickly competing newspapers sprang up in The Hague, Haarlem, Weesp, Utrecht and Rotterdam to fill the gap in the market left by the forced retrenchment of local production. As a result the Amsterdam newspapers lost their dominant position in the Dutch news trade. Galling though this must have been, the Amsterdam newsmen had little choice but to accommodate themselves to the new order. Despite the peculiar arrangement, the four remaining Amsterdam courantiers maintained editorial independence, and did not share resources or networks of correspondents. This strange market management did not lead to any homogenisation of news content. One of the four newspapers, the Ordinarise Middel-weeckse Courante, was clearly a cut below the rest by the mid-1660s.<sup>2</sup>

In 1670 a transformation was initiated which would reduce these editorial differences, and see the remaining titles standardised into one conglomerated venture: the Amsterdamsche Courant. This was a gradual process, taking place over more than a decade; it was also complex, and, perhaps understandably, has never before been described in detail.<sup>3</sup> Ultimately the transformation of the four Amsterdam newspapers (which included the oldest two papers in the country) into one venture would lead to the reduction in the number of courantiers in Amsterdam and a centralisation of the production of news. It would also see the magistrates of Amsterdam taking a more prominent role in the supervision and production of the news. The Amsterdamsche Courant would be published until 1903; for most of the eighteenth century it was, with the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant, the bestselling newspaper in the Dutch Republic.<sup>4</sup> Like its Haarlem competitor, the seventeenth-century issues of the Amsterdamsche Courant have survived well, and can be found in twenty-one archives and libraries today. From September 1684 onwards the survival of the newspaper is near complete.

The emergence of the conglomerated Amsterdamsche Courant began with the death of Sara Vlaminck, the publisher of the Ordinarise Middel-weeckse Courante, in the final week of December 1669. Vlaminck was replaced as courantier in January 1670 by her son-in-law Matheus Cousaert (1630–1689); presumably Cousaert had already been involved in the production of the Ordinarise Middel-weeckse Courante, so he was a suitable successor. But Cousaert did not continue the Ordinarise Middel-weeckse Courante—instead, he became the publisher every other Tuesday of the Amsteldamsche Dingsdaegse Courant. At the exact same time Otto Barentsz Smient (1614–1689), the publisher of the Saturday Courante uyt Italien, Duytslandt, &c., transformed his newspaper into the Amsterdamse Saturday Courant.

In January 1671 the process of conglomeration continued when Jan Jacobsz Bouman (?–1671), the publisher of the Saturday Tijdinghen uyt verscheyde Quartieren, died as well. His position was filled by Casparus Commelijn (1636–1693), the son of Isaac Commelijn (1598–1676), a respected publisher, historian and regent.<sup>5</sup> Casparus ran a high-end publishing house in Amsterdam, producing a few Latin editions of the classics, and providing a platform for scholarly relatives and friends to publish their scientific observations and tracts. It was no coincidence that Casparus Commelijn was appointed as courantier: the magistrates of Amsterdam had delegated burgomaster Gillis Valckenier (1623–1680), a relative by marriage of Commelijn, to appoint the new courantier.<sup>6</sup> The appointment of Commelijn was an indication that the magistrates had come to regard the position as a means to reward their friends and allies; the post was now seen as a financial investment, and not one which required extensive expertise as a news publisher.

From early 1671 Commelijn published the Amsterdamsche Zaturdaeghse Courant on every other Saturday. The final courantier to make the transition to the consortium was stadsdrukker Johannes (III) van Ravesteyn (1618–1681), publisher since 1661 of the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante.<sup>7</sup> From the start of 1672 Van Ravesteyn transformed his newspaper into the Ordinaris Amsterdamse Dingsdaeghse Courant.

These adjustments may, at first, seem relatively trivial. Nothing changed in the availability of newspapers in Amsterdam; the four courantiers continued to share a numbering sequence as they had done in the 1650s and 1660s; and each maintained the same style and design for their fortnightly issue. But a careful examination of the surviving issues published by the four courantiers in the 1670s reveals that they were soon co-operating in their news gathering and sharing a network of correspondents. The editorial diversity which marked the four earlier Amsterdam titles disappeared. The Saturday issues of Commelijn and Smient became remarkably similar, as did the Tuesday issues published by Cousaert and Van Ravesteyn. Most Tuesday issues opened with reports from Madrid, Genoa, Rome, Milan and Venice; followed by one or two reports from Paris and London; a report from Warsaw; a few reports from Vienna; a range of German reports, usually from Cologne and Hamburg; and followed by reports from Brussels, The Hague and Amsterdam. The Saturday issues contained a comparable range of reports, but they were more likely to include reports from France rather than Italy. Who prompted this cooperation, and how it was achieved, is difficult to establish. It is possible that the four courantiers shared a subscription list of newsletters, and exchanged news on a weekly basis.

It is certain that by 1673 the four newspapermen were collaborating closely. They all featured at the top of the first page an identical woodcut of the coat of arms of Amsterdam. In the early 1660s Otto Barentsz Smient was the first Amsterdam courantier to use a coat of arms in his title, and he was followed in 1671 by Commelijn and Cousaert; in 1672 Van Ravesteyn also added a woodcut to his fortnightly issue. From June 1673 the four began to use the exact same woodcut, indicating that the production process too was cooperative. In fact, Commelijn and Cousaert do not seem to have acquired printing presses, and the printers of their issues have not yet been identified. It is likely that Van Ravesteyn and Smient may have printed not only their own, but the issues of Commelijn and Cousaert as well. The distribution of the Amsterdamsche Courant may also have been spread between the four courantiers. On 19 January 1677 Johannes van Ravesteyn advertised in the Amsterdamsche Courant that a portion of the issues that he received for sale “is also available with Johannes van Someren, bookseller in the Kalverstraat”.<sup>8</sup> It made sense that all four newsmen obtained copies of every single issue in this way: it would have been far too intricate for customers to pick up their weekly issue at four different shops every fortnight.

The schedule of publication of the consortium was even more complicated when the Amsterdamsche Courant became a tri-weekly newspaper in 1673. Like the tri-weekly Oprechte Haerlemse Courant, the Amsterdam paper now appeared on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. The extra work was divided equally: every courantier would continue to publish their regular fortnightly issue, and publish the Thursday issue once in four weeks (see table 43.1).<sup>9</sup> That this was a complex operation is clear not least from the fact that the courantiers often misnumbered their respective issues. In 1677 Cousaert systematically misnumbered his Tuesday and Thursday issues, while Smient and Commelijn misnumbered their Thursday issues too.

TABLE 43.1 The model of publication of the tri-weekly Amsterdamsche Courant between 1673 and 1681, when Matheus Cousaert, Casparus Commelijn, Johannes (III) van Ravesteyn, and Otto Barentsz Smient published the newspaper as a conglomerate 1682 the established consortium fell apart. On 3 October 1682 the Amsterdam publisher Adriaen (I) van Gaesbeeck (1641–1686) was appointed courantier by the magistrates of Amsterdam.<sup>10</sup> Van Gaesbeeck was not a replacement for Johannes van Ravesteyn; rather, he replaced all three remaining newsmen. Archival sources have left no clear indication of the motivation behind this radical alteration. Perhaps the magistrates were unsatisfied by the complexity of the existing arrangement, and considered that a single courantier would be easier to supervise. Van Gaesbeeck, son of a Leiden confectioner, had established himself in Amsterdam in 1670 as a publisher and printer of scholarly and classical texts, often cooperating with his brothers Daniel and Abraham, who worked in the Leiden book trade.<sup>11</sup> His connections with the Amsterdam magistrates are uncertain, and he seems a curious appointment to replace the experienced Otto Barentsz Smient and Matheus Cousaert and the well-connected Casparus Commelijn.

The survival of nine issues of the Amsterdamsche Courant in 1682 indicate that Van Gaesbeeck published his first issue on 15 October. Van Gaesbeeck maintained the established periodicity of the newspaper, publishing on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, but he made a change in the appearance of the newspaper: he published the Amsterdamsche Courant as a quarto pamphlet of four pages (a half-sheet of paper), with two columns on each page. This was a significant departure from the double-sided folio format invented in Amsterdam in the 1610s; a style which had been the standard of publication in Amsterdam, and imitated by newsmen throughout the Dutch Republic, the Southern Netherlands and England. It is difficult to establish why Van Gaesbeeck made this change. Perhaps he wished to emphasise the collectability of the newspaper: the larger folio format was not as well suited to collective binding as the pamphlet newspapers. The quarto issues of the Amsterdamsche Courant published by Van Gaesbeeck contained sequential signature statements, as was common on pamphlet newspapers of the seventeenth century published in The Hague, Utrecht and outside the Dutch Republic.

Van Gaesbeeck was the only publisher of the Amsterdamsche Courant until January 1686. At that point the magistrates of Amsterdam reappointed Casparus Commelijn as courantier to share the position with Van Gaesbeeck.<sup>12</sup> Again, the archival record does not reveal why Commelijn reappeared, but one can speculate that this was most likely the result of lobbying by the Commelijn family and its allies in the city council. The two men briefly shared the publication of the newspaper, once more through an intricate arrangement. Van Gaesbeeck would publish every Tuesday issue, Commelijn would publish every Saturday issue, and they alternated publication of the Thursday issue. Van Gaesbeeck continued to publish his issues as quarto pamphlets, whereas Commelijn published his as double-sided folios. As a result a subscriber to the Amsterdamsche Courant would receive their newspaper in different formats, all depending on the day of the week. This awkward cooperation soon came to an end, because Adriaen van Gaesbeeck died in mid-February. Perhaps the magistrates knew that Van Gaesbeeck was ill, or the courantier was struggling to produce three issues a week, so that Commelijn was reappointed to assist him.

After Van Gaesbeeck's death the magistrates resolved that henceforth only a single courantier would be responsible for the Amsterdamsche Courant. Commelijn would remain in the position until his death in 1693. Commelijn came to an arrangement with the bookseller Aart Dircksz Oossaan (?–1692), who had a shop on the bourse, from which he was charged with the distribution and sale of the newspaper. They also agreed that Oossaan would supply Commelijn with interesting news doing the rounds at the bourse, so that he could include the latest rumours and speculations.<sup>13</sup> Commelijn's fortunes could not be different from that of his former colleagues, Matheus Cousaert and Otto Barentsz Smient. Cousaert, the son of a grocer, died destitute in 1689, while Smient failed to reignite his prolific publishing career after his fall from grace in 1682.<sup>14</sup> In contrast, Commelijn became governor of the Nieuwezijds Huiszittenhuis, a prominent institution of poor relief in the city; he also, through this office, gained access to the municipal archives, usually restricted to those with official need of them. Thanks to this access he spent the final years of his life composing a monumental history of Amsterdam, the Beschryvinge van Amsterdam, published around the time of his death.<sup>15</sup> He was certainly the wealthiest courantier in the Dutch Republic, moving in 1690 to an imposing property on the Herengracht, around the corner from the Wolvenstraat. The rent for this house was 1,000 gulden per year—an enormous cost compared to the dwellings of his late colleague Otto Barentsz Smient, who had bought a house on the Reguliersbreestraat for 4,360 gulden.<sup>16</sup> Commelijn was a very different newspaper publisher to many of his colleagues earlier in the century; he was a man who viewed his position as a means to mingle in higher circles and as a supplement to his (already substantial) investments. When he gained the right at the end of 1689 to publish a French newspaper he quickly sold the privilege to Jean Tronchin Dubreuil. At his death, Commelijn's wealth was valued at 76,296 gulden.<sup>17</sup>

During Commelijn's time as publisher the Amsterdamsche Courant went through one notable change. In 1689 and 1690 the issues of the newspaper were no longer numbered. This was an eccentric deviation from a by now well-established norm, and one not easily explained. At the start of 1691 a numbering sequence returned, and henceforth the three weekly issues shared the same sequence (numbered 1–156 rather than three separate sequences of 1–52). At the death of Aart Dircksz Oosaaan the bookseller Johannes Broers (1666–1716) was appointed as the new distributor of the Amsterdamsche Courant, but Broers did not last long in this position.<sup>18</sup> When Commelijn died in 1693 the lawyer Willem Arnold (1654–1723) and Jacomijntje van Duijveland (?–c. 1724), the widow of Aart Dircksz Oosaaan, were appointed as co-publishers of the Amsterdamsche Courant.<sup>19</sup> The new appointees were to share all costs and profits equally; Arnold was tasked with the news gathering and writing of the newspaper, and Van Duijveland with the printing and distribution. At his appointment the Amsterdam magistrates drew up a detailed instruction for Arnold concerning his responsibilities as a news writer. These are deeply revealing of the news priorities of the Dutch elite at the end of the seventeenth century. It is safe to say that they had lost none of the instinct for restricting sensitive information to a narrowly-defined class of privileged opinion formers.

Instruction for the city's courantier, according to which he will regulate himself precisely.

1. That he will pay close attention, never to enter in the newspaper any news concerning the condition and composition of the navy and army of the state, which could be used to the advantage by the enemy or any other ill-intentioned parties, and lead to the disadvantage of the common good of the state.

2. That he will not mention which ships are in preparation to depart these lands, or return to these lands, nor any of the convoys, with regards to the enemy taking advantage of such information to the detriment of the subjects of this state.

3. That he will not insert in the newspaper any shocking or satirical passages regarding the Pope, cardinals or other ecclesiastical figures.

4. Likewise [he will not insert] any reports giving offence to crowned heads, princes and other potentates.

5. And [he will not insert] any general pasquilles, of whatever nature they may be.

6. And he will bear responsibility that the newspaper will not feature any news regarding the Allies of this state which might be insulting.

7. That he will not divulge through the newspaper any domestic affairs or resolutions of the state, even if they are not secret, as they are not suited to be disseminated by a public gazette.

8. Finally, that in everything, he will do his best to give no offence to any, and especially to those noble persons allied and befriended to this state.

9. And that he will perform his duties to, at all times, gather good and proper news, and not divulge any abusive tidings.<sup>20</sup>

To the magistrates of Amsterdam the Amsterdamsche Courant was not simply a private, commercial venture. They had determined that the newspaper fell under direct jurisdiction of the city council, and the detailed instruction to Arnold was another significant step to tie the publication of the Amsterdamsche Courant closer to the municipality. In 1723, when Arnold died, the magistrates would go as far to claim that the newspaper was municipal property. The new appointee, Gillis van den Bemden, was a member of the city council, and later burgomaster. He concerned himself little with the day-to-day production of the newspaper, and hired writers and translators to produce the paper.<sup>21</sup> Henceforth the newspaper was run as a municipal investment, and it would contribute substantial annual profits to the city's coffers in the mid-eighteenth century. Under the direction of the magistrates, those responsible for the Amsterdamsche Courant reduced their investments in correspondents and devoted increasing attention to advertising. In the final decades of the eighteenth century the Amsterdamsche Courant made an average annual profit of 20,000 gulden, a handsome contribution to the treasury.<sup>22</sup> The rival Oprechte Haerlemse Courant made far less money in the same period, largely due to the significant investments made by the publishers in a network of correspondents.<sup>23</sup>

Under the partnership of Willem Arnold, a lawyer trained at Leiden and Harderwijk, and Jacomijntje van Duijveland, the Amsterdamsche Courant was of superior quality. A comparison between issues of the Amsterdamsche Courant and the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant in the 1690s reveals that the two newspapers competed closely. The two newspapers were published on the same days, and they often included identical reports.<sup>24</sup> They clearly tapped into similar news networks, and they also tried to trump one another through the inclusion of late incoming reports. Dozens of variants of the Amsterdamsche Courant have been identified, the majority from the 1690s: the most common distinction between the editions is the inclusion of a second report from The Hague, bearing the latest domestic political and diplomatic news. The late arriving news normally displaced one or two advertisements. The Oprechte Haerlemse Courant, the established paper of record, remained more popular with advertisers: the Haarlem paper featured more than 7,300 advertisements and public announcements between 1693 and 1700, compared to just over 6,000 for the Amsterdamsche Courant in the same period. But this was not to last. The Amsterdamsche Courant was able to build in the eighteenth century on the vast market provided by Amsterdam's commercial community. While the Haarlem tri-weekly continued to enjoy its role as the national paper of the Dutch Republic, the Amsterdamsche Courant made larger profits by selling most of its weekly copies in the city itself.

Before the newspaper was turned into municipal property Willem Arnold was rewarded for his efforts. In 1698 the magistrates decreed that Arnold would receive the privilege of a prominent seat in the Westerkerk, sitting with the secretaries of the treasury. In 1708 Arnold's daughter would marry Anthoni Pauw, the new publisher of the tri-weekly 's Gravenhaegse Courant.<sup>25</sup> The new century heralded a new era for the courantier; one of privilege, recognition and civic responsibility, and one far removed from the weekly toil of the first pioneers at the beginning of the seventeenth century.

NB.

In 1683 Adriaen van Gaesbeeck skipped a number in the sequence of the Tuesday issue in January or February, and for the rest of the year the Tuesday issue was one number ahead of the Saturday and Thursday issues.

In 1687 the first Tuesday issue was numbered 2 rather than 1.

The spelling of the Amsterdamsche Courant went through numerous changes, especially during the 1670s and 1680s, when the newspaper was published by multiple newsmen. Amsteldamsche and Amsterdamsche were used up to 1686, when Amsterdamse became the preferred spelling. Saturday was spelled alternatively Sat-ur-daghse, Zaturdaeghse, Saturdaegse and Saterdaeghse; Tuesday as Dingsdaegse, Dingsdaeghsche, and Dingsdaeghse; and Thursday as Donderdaeghse, Donderdaghe, Donderdaegsche and Donderdaegse.

Item arriveerde de volgende Engelsche Oorlog-schepen, als de Duche, de Hangmaet, Montagne en de Saphir, met 3 kleine Engelsche schepen, met Haring geladen. Den 4 deser arriveerde 't Engelsche Oorlog-schip de Happyte-jona, met de Franse Kapten van St. Malo, Nostra Signora de Grace, Cap. Monif. de Raucheloe Gonn, die op de Portugesche Kust heeft ge-kruist en veel Schepen weg genomen, in gemelde Kapet zyn gevonden ontrent de 30000 Pefos Contanten, heeft ontrent 15 doden en weynig gequettien, en 't Engelsche Schip niet meer als 4 a 5 doden en weynig gequettien, en heden arriveerde van Londen 3 Engelsche Schepen, als de Cesar, Stat Cadix en de Koopman van St. Cruz.

Madrid den 17 Mey. Het Houwelyk tusschen den Koning en Koninginne is den 4 deser geconformmeert, zynde de Ceremonien door den Aerds-bischoff van St. Jago en de Patriarch van Iadien, alternatiffement gefolmeiffert. Haer Majesteyten zyn gebleven tot den 17 tot Valedolid, om de Stieren-gevechten en andere Vreude-tekenen met hare presentien te vereeren, en zyn aldien selven dag van daer herwaerts aen komende opgebroeken, en eerfster avond op de Pardo, zynde een Koninklyk Luthuys, 2 mylen van hier, aengekomen, alwaer de Koninginne Moeder, en de principaelsten Adel haer Majesteyt hebben weeten ontfangen, en gister tot op de Restro geconformmeert, fillende haer Majesteyten in dat Paleys tot den 21, als wanneer de publyke Intrede, op het heerlycke geschieden sal, haer onthouden. Syn Majesteyt heeft den Grave van Manvelt, in consideratie van sijne gedane diensten, met den Staat en Leen van Fondi, met een titul van Prins in 't Ryk van Napels geconfirmeert, welk Prinsdom haerlyks bedraegt 8000 silvere Ducaten, men heeft hier tydinge dat tot Cadix was aengekomen de ordre van syn Majesteyt gefonden door den Envoye Extraordinaris Francisco Schouenberg, om de goederen gekomen met de nieuw aengekomen Schepen te mogen lossen, onafgeeffen geen Testimonia van de Consuls hebben. Men heeft ook tydinge dat den Engelsen Vice-Admiraal Killigrew, en den Hollanden Vice-Admiraal Almonde verlaen hebbende uyt advertentie van hier gegeven, dat Mr. de Chatteauxnault met 8 a 10 Oorlog-schepen, daer onder het schip de Groote St. Louis met 1000 flacken, Rond van Toulon te komen na de Ocean, makende haer getee om met 14 Oorlog-schepen en 3 Banders voor het nieuw van de Straet te gaan kruysen, om de Franflan af te wachten.

I T A L I E N.

Napels den 9 Mey. Alles stelt men in werk om Gelt by een te brengen voor 't Milanees. Van Messina heeft men dat 3 Turke Garveelen, 3 Barken genomen hebben, en op nog een jacht makten. Den gewelen Montus is na Rome verzoeken, van waer den Cardinaal d'Agliette verwacht wort.

Genoa den 13 Mey. Met een Franse Tartan van Algiers heeft men, dat 18 schepen en 1 Barken met den eersten op de Roof Ronden Zee te lieffen, Cap. Michiel Angelo Rossi, k-mende van Cadix, heeft met een Turk hart haer geveren. Men segt ontrent Alicauten een Engelsche Schep met Coranten per Londen geladen, door storm gebleven is. Uyt 't Milanees heeft men, dat den Gouverneur de Lant-zaten belast heeft haer beste goederen inde Syden, en haer in ons gebiet te bergen.

Turin den 15 Mey. De Militie van dele Staat bout haer marsch van dies op dit Oefend is meer Canon geplant, en Ammunition gebragt. Marquis St. Joris is na Verdel als Gouverneur by Pinerolo sijn 10000 Mannen aengekomen; Monfr. Catinet verwacht de Cavalery, en de de reit van de Troupen sijn reets eenige tot Valencia aengekomen, en staet na Casal daer mede te marcheren, hebbende een brug over de Po gellagen; dit veroorzaakt groot alarm en vluchten in 't Lant; hy eyscht van onsen Hartog 1000 Paerden en 3000 te voer.

Rome den 13 Mey. De Militie vertrekt vast om na de Levant gevoert te worden. In de laatste ghonden Congregatie heeft men gesien, dat de verschillen met Vranryk meer na achter als vooren gingen. De Paus ordonneerde, dat den Nuntius Nicolini op 't spoedigst sijn van Lissabon na Parys soude begeven, om te beletten dat de Clergie daer geen quade passien tegens de H-Stoel en doen. Na dat den Resident van Savoyen audientie by den Paus op gisteren heeft gehad, is men aen 't Hof wat swaar hoofdig geworden, vreesende dat de Oorlogs-Vlam in Italien staet ontfloeken te worden.

Milzaan den 16 Mey. Syn Exe heeft eenige Switsers doen lichten, en verdragt de Volkere die in Duyslant geworden sijn. Men vult de Frontier Steden met Volk op, en de Troupen sijn geduig aan 't marcheren. Door dese Stad sijn voorleden Saterdag veel Bijetten aengeslagen gevonden, om den 14 tot Casal by Monfr. Catinet te komen, om over de Contributie te accordeeren; hy pretendeert 150000 Pifloren, en by weygering dreymt hy deselve met Militaire Executie te halen. Men markt d'Artillery met alle spoet vaerdig. Men scaet, dat de Franflan aen de Gemeenten passagie door haer Gebiet verlicht hebben, dat haer niet weynig alarmeert.

Milzaan den 17 Mey. De Franflan sijn met 8000 man by Egnarol, in Savoyen onverwagt ingevallen, sonder dat daar van hier enige Militie was, dat groot vluchten op onse Frontieren veroorzaakte. Op dit advys is onse Militie derwaerts veretrokken, en de gevluchte weder na haer wooningen geleert.

Pinerolo den 19 Mey. Over Otranto zyn brieven uyt de Vloot, die het linken van de groote St. Marco, en 't nemen van de St. Joseph, in het gevecht tegens 12 groote Turke Oorlog-schepen, en 7 Berlede, daer den Edele Veler in is gesnevelt, confirmeeren. Van Morza heeft men met een Vaertuyg 't arrivement van 't laatste Convooy en Galleyen van hier in de Levant.

E N G E L A N D, &c.

Belfall den 17 Mey. Men heeft een Brief van den Gouverneur van Charlemont aen den Gewelen Konink onderscheyt, te kennen geveende dat hy 't niet boven 10 dagen sal kunnen uythouden; hier op heeft den Hartog van Schomberg gefolueerd om een formeele bedgering aan te vangen. Onsen Armee is in 2 partien verdeeld; zynde 10000 man daer van onder 't Comandant van Coll. Wolflay, die met volkomen magt, om te doen 200 by 't goet vind, na Dublin is getrokken. Den Luytenant Generaal Douglass is met een Corps van 8000 man in de Provincie van Connaugh; en den Hertog van Schomberg is met een Leger van 10000 man Ruytery en Voet-volk in 't Veld, hebbende de zielen te rug gefonden.

Edenburgh den 18 Mey. Heden vergaderde het Parlement, en 't eerste dat 'er voorgelagen werd, was om een Comité van Electien aen te stellen; doch des Konings Advocaet bragt in dat de Acte wegens het afschaffen der voorige Comité des Parlements, genaemd de Artyleken, eerst sou geconfidereerd worden; en de Hertog Hamilton oordeelde dat de Acte wegens vryheid van spreken eerst behoort te overwegen te worden; dies nam men de stemmen op, en bevond dat des Advocaets voorstel overhaalde. Toen gaf de Graef van Argyll een Acte in tot vernietiging van een Wet in de gemelde Artyleken, door dewelcke de Afschieten van Staat boven 't behoortlyk getal water in die Comité. Sir James Ogiloy gaf een Acte in van de selfde forme, en de Hartog Hamilton gaf 'er een in om de Artyleken eenigzins in weeten te houden, waer op een Debat ontfond; dog vermits Ogiloy sijn aen Argyll overgaf, soo werd Hamiltons, die maer 15 stemmen had, verworpen, en Argyles met eenige weynige verbeteringen goedgekeurd: waer op de Koninklyke toestemminge aenfondt volgede. Daer na quam de Kerkelyke Regeeringe in overweeging, en werd gestemd dat men de vaststelling der selfe aen een Comité sou stelen. Vervolgens werden de verbeurten, de subsidie van haer Majesteyten, en de Acte wegens vryheid van spreken geconformmeert; en vermits eenige toen sjaeken van 't Parlement te adjournneeren, soo brachten anderen in dat de 3 verseyde Staten sich van mall anderen souden scheyden, en yder apart haer Leden tot een Comité kiesen; doch dat wient tot 's anderendaegs uytgeleed. Toen brachten de Burgen een Bill in tot herroeping van een Acte van Karel de Tweede, waer door de Onvrye Corporatien haer Neering en Koophandel benudeeldengelyc geleiden zynde, tot 's anderendaegs werd uytgeleed. Door een Perfoon, onlangs van de Hoorlanders gekomen, verstaet men, dat sy in groote schrik en verbaftelheid zyn. De Major Generaal Mackay sal morgen of overmorgen met sijn Troupen marcheren, om sijn by die van 't Noorden te voegen. De Laird Evan Cameron van Loghiell segt men dat dood gestoken is, willende 3 anderen, die met malkander vechtende waren, scheyden. De Luytenant Murray die (als voor desen gemeld) tegen Capiteyn Dunbar is uytgeweeld, is heden alhier uyt het Eyland Mull aengekomen, zynde by na uytgehongerd: Hy segt dat de Rebellen seer bevreesd zyn dat 'er geen ontfiet van Ierland sal komen.

Edenburgh den 19 Mey. Van daeg vergaderde het Parlement weer op de bestende tyd, en na het oproepen der Rollen, liet men de Leden volgens georoethe in 't vertrek gaan, blivende de Baronnen in 't Parlements-huys, terwyl de Leden van de Burgen sijn na de Commissaris Bank begaven; liefende yder sijn Leden apart tot de respectieve Comitéte. Onderaustschen ging de Lord Hooge Commissaris boven na 't nieuw Eschequer Huys; dewyl 't niet gebruykelyc is dat deselve by foodanige verkieffingen optretten zyn. Dies wieden 'er dan een Comité voor Electien, een Comité voor de Kerk, een Comité voor een Subsidie, en een Comité voor de Verbeurten verkooren; aen welke Comité van Verbeurten ook de Acte van Vryheid van spreken werd geleed; en daer op keerden de verseyde Staten yder weer na haer banken. Waer op de Lord Commissaris de verseyde Comitéteu ordinerde om tegens morgen te gaan siten; mogende dat van tyd tot tyd adjournneeren, en ook in de intervallen Parlements 'samen kounen. Levingsstone heeft 8000 man ontfmoet by de Coloneel Buchan meenden te gaan, en Levingsstone volk voor de party aenfigen; dog alle die geen quartier wilden nemen, wierden ontfmoet.

Latin Courante Amsterdam, 1672

On 5 November 1672 an advertisement was placed in the Saturday issue of the Amsterdamsche Courant. It read as follows:

All are hereby notified that in Amsterdam there is to be published every Tuesday and Saturday a Latin Courante, composed in elegant prose, so that young and old, even those who are only a little schooled in this tongue, can find their enjoyment: copies are to be found with Gerard Borstius, on the corner of the Nieuwendijk, on the Dam.<sup>1</sup>

This hitherto unknown advertisement is the only piece of evidence of the publication of a Latin newspaper in the Low Countries in the seventeenth century. Not a single issue of this venture has survived.

Throughout Europe seventeenth-century Latin newspapers are extremely rare, but not unknown. One of the earliest known serial news venture, the semi-annual Mercurius Gallobelgicus, was published in Latin in Cologne from 1592 onwards. Latin newspapers were most popular in the Holy Roman Empire, where at least seven different papers were published during the course of the seventeenth century.<sup>2</sup> Most were short-lived, suggesting that the hope to make a commercial venture of a Latin newspaper was fundamentally misconceived. The growth of the newspaper market was intrinsically connected with the growing popularity of vernacular media—a result of the Reformation and the conflicts of late sixteenth-century Europe. The publication of a newspaper was a source of linguistic and political pride. As the newspaper expanded across Europe it appeared in an increasing range of languages: Portuguese, Polish, Swedish, Danish and Russian. The international value and usage of Latin was gradually relegated to scholarly and theological circles. The new lingua franca of the political and literary world was French; the many French newspapers published throughout the Low Countries and the Holy Roman Empire in the later seventeenth and eighteenth centuries provided a truly international press.<sup>3</sup>

Gerardus Borstius (c. 1650–1707), the Amsterdam publisher behind the advertisement for the Latin Courante, was not unaware of the vernacular dominance of the news trade. Instead Borstius marketed his venture as a literary product: he emphasised the elegance of the writing, and the pedagogical use of reading the news in Latin. The didactic applications of newspapers were widely appreciated, and by the eighteenth century newspapers were used in schools as material for reading practice throughout the Dutch Republic.<sup>4</sup> The news could be read for enjoyment and education as much as political interest; Borstius was shrewd to recognise the demands and tastes of a wide reading public.

However, Borstius was not a newsman. In 1672 he was twenty-two years old, and was only just making a start in the book trade.<sup>5</sup> He would never make his career in news publications: the vast majority of the 259 known titles published by Borstius from 1672 to 1707 are devotional and theological tracts.<sup>6</sup> If any of the issues of the Latin Courante did appear in November 1672, how would the young Borstius have achieved this? Setting up a newspaper required significant financial investment and business contacts. A young bookseller with an interest in devotional and literary texts is unlikely to have gained a serious foothold in the international news world. Instead it is probable that Borstius offered a translation of the Dutch Amsterdamsche Courant, which at this point was published on Tuesdays and Saturdays. If Borstius made an arrangement with the Amsterdam courantiers he might have been able to receive an early draft of the newspaper on Mondays and Fridays, ensuring that he could publish a translation the following day. Another possibility is that Borstius re-issued a Latin newspaper published in the Holy Roman Empire. In 1672 there were two likely models: Peter Hilden's Ordinariae Relationes, published in Cologne, and Georg Greflinger's Relationes Latinae & Gallicae, published in Hamburg.<sup>7</sup>

It seems unlikely that Borstius' advertisement was only an empty promise, and that the Latin Courante never appeared. The placement of an advertisement was not cheap, and Borstius' motivation seems sincere, especially in light of his further career. It is probable that the Courante was published for several weeks or months, but that the new Latin newspaper quickly folded. 1672 was probably the worst year in the history of the Dutch Republic to start a serial news venture. By the summer of 1672 the French army had reached Utrecht, and remained at the frontier of Holland for the rest of the year. The resulting political crisis and the disruption of trade and financial networks created an environment in which any new periodical was doomed to struggle. Although the Latin Courante was a bold and imaginative contribution to the literature of the schoolroom by an ambitious young bookseller, it was born at the wrong time.

Waerachtigh Verhael

Brussels, 1673–1674

At the end of August 1649 the French lawyer Pierre Hugonet published the first issue of the Courier véritable des Pays-Bas. This Brussels newspaper, known as the Relations véritables from 1650 onwards, would become the most prominent periodical in the Habsburg Netherlands, published under various names up to 1795.<sup>1</sup> This French bi-weekly newspaper was remarkably different from its Flemish competitors in Antwerp, Bruges, and later Ghent.<sup>2</sup> At a price of three stuivers, the Relations véritables was three times the price of other Southern Netherlandish periodicals.<sup>3</sup> Hugonet targeted an international elite audience of statesmen, courtiers and those who aspired to a place in the circles of power. The courantier concerned himself with the paper only as its proprietor and publisher; he delegated the printing to Willem Scheybels and the sale to Guillaume Hacqueband. Hugonet invested in an expansive international news network, providing a news service superior to that of his fellow courantiers in the Habsburg Netherlands. Nevertheless, Hugonet lost money on the venture. The Relations véritables was marketed towards a small Francophone elite, in contrast to the Flemish newspapers, which could serve a larger mercantile, literary and professional clientele.

Hugonet modelled the Relations véritables on the Paris Gazette: a venture based on courtly patronage and sponsorship which offered fervent support for the policies of the French state.<sup>4</sup> Hugonet's Brussels paper brought similar journalistic enthusiasm to the Habsburg cause. During the Franco-Spanish war of the 1650s Hugonet engaged in a series of public spats with the publisher of the Paris Gazette, Théophraste Renaudot. The two men frequently denounced one another in their newspapers, ending their issues with a demonstration of the lies and fabrications of their rival. The staunch defence of Habsburg reputation and dynastic interests in Hugonet's Relations véritables did not go unnoticed at the Habsburg court in Brussels, and Hugonet was granted by the Privy Council a monopoly of newspaper publication in the Habsburg Netherlands.<sup>5</sup> This exclusive licence had little value in the face of existing privileges granted to courantiers by regional institutions such as the Council of Brabant. The monopoly did not even discourage new courantiers from applying for licenses: towards the end of 1666 the Ghent publisher Maximiliaen Graet was granted the right to publish a bi-weekly newspaper by the Council of Flanders in direct contravention of Hugonet's Privy Council licence.<sup>6</sup>

What Hugonet truly required to maintain his unprofitable periodical venture was a state pension, similar to that granted to Renaudot for his Gazette. This, however, eluded him—the Privy Council evidently did not appreciate a supportive newspaper to the same degree as the ministers of Louis XIII and Louis XIV in Paris. Disillusioned and exhausted, in 1667 Hugonet sold the rights to the Relations véritables to Dr Adrien Foppens (1631–1695).<sup>7</sup>

Foppens was the son of a Frisian Catholic exile who had settled in Brussels. Foppens studied medicine in Paris, where he befriended the family Renaudot.<sup>8</sup> On his return to Brussels, Foppens worked as an agent for his brother Franciscus (I) (1626–1688), a bookseller and printer, before dedicating himself to his position as courantier. His brother became the printer of the Relations véritables, while Pierre de Cleyn (?–1690) became the official seller. Adrien Foppens never allowed his name to be printed on his newspaper, maintaining the anonymity of an objective news writer; from 1667 to 1685 only De Cleyn's name was mentioned in the imprint.

Foppens was a successful courantier, more so than his predecessor. In the early 1670s he secured an annual pension of 480 gulden from the Privy Council, the secure salary which had eluded Pierre Hugonet.<sup>9</sup> Foppens was defended on several occasions by the Privy Council when foreign governments made complaints about his news reporting, and was able to profit from his close connections at court by producing, in addition to his newspaper, an exclusive manuscript newsletter service.<sup>10</sup> Although Foppens found himself in trouble with the Privy Council in the later 1680s for the supply of state secrets to foreign governments, the courantier was back in favour after a prison sentence and a suspension. Foppens would die at the end of the century a wealthy man.

One of Foppens' first objectives as newspaperman was to enforce his monopoly of newspaper publishing against the courantiers of Antwerp, Bruges and Ghent. Hugonet had tried on several occasions to realise the full potential of his licence granted by the Privy Council, but found his superiors reluctant to take action. Foppens would make a more determined effort. At the start of 1672 the courantier submitted an anonymous petition to the Privy Council, demanding the immediate prohibition of all other newspapers in the Habsburg Netherlands.<sup>11</sup> The Council contacted the magistrates of Antwerp, Bruges and Ghent, asking them to supply information on the active courantiers in their cities and their legal privileges.

The magistrates replied within several months. The councillors of Bruges stated that their three local courantiers, who published a bi-weekly newspaper as a consortium, were licensed publishers and had produced newspapers for many years, thereby gaining a local customary right of publication.<sup>12</sup> The magistrates of Antwerp replied that their courantiers (Maria Strang and Peter Verdussen), were licensed under the jurisdiction of the Council of Brabant.<sup>13</sup> The magistrates of Ghent provided the staunchest response: they stood right behind their courantier (Maximiliaen Graet), whom they said provided an immense benefit to their city by producing a Flemish newspaper, which was of great use to the mercantile and civic community. They also emphasised that their local newspaper cost only one stuiver, a third of the price of the Relations véritables, and that the citizens of Ghent would not be willing to buy a French newspaper instead of a Flemish one.<sup>14</sup> The magistrates would therefore not instruct their courantier to cease the publication of his Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen.

The reply from the Ghent councillors proved useful to the Privy Council. Faced by the unanimous defiance of the three cities, the Council notified Foppens that his monopoly would only be upheld if he also published a Flemish newspaper.<sup>15</sup> days and Thursdays: the Waerachtigh Verhael. Sixty issues of this newspaper have survived from February 1673 to December 1674, all extant in only a single copy.<sup>16</sup> The Waerachtigh Verhael was beautifully designed, certainly compared to the cruder typography of other Southern Netherlandish periodicals. The newspaper appeared as a four-page quarto pamphlet (a half-sheet of paper), and was signed consecutively throughout. Two woodcut emblems, of the Duchy of Brabant and the city of Brussels, accompanied the title on the first page of every issue. The news reports were set in two columns in a new roman typeface, not yet marked by the wear and tear of many years of use. The datelines of the reports were set in a cursive typeface, and headers grouping reports by geographical origin were set in distinctive roman capitals.

The Waerachtigh Verhael echoed the refined and cosmopolitan style of the Relations véritables. Foppens offered the Flemish reader not only a sophisticated product, but a more expansive news service compared to the other Flemish newspapers. On Mondays Foppens generally presented news from Madrid, Warsaw or Lviv, Vienna, Hamburg, Cologne, Copenhagen, The Hague, Liège and Brussels; on Thursday he published reports from Italy (often Naples, Rome, Genoa, Milan and Venice), Vienna, Regensburg, Cologne, London, Paris and Brussels. At around 2,000 words and an average of ten news reports per issue, the Waerachtigh Verhael offered more than the Ghendtsche Post-Tydinghen, which published six or seven reports in its bi-weekly issues.<sup>17</sup>

Foppens continued his campaign against the rivals who ignored his privilege in the Southern Netherlands at the end of each issue of the Waerachtigh Verhael. The imprint of the newspaper read: "In Brussels, [available] with Pierre de Cleyn, [published] with privilege and [hereby] prohibiting all newspapers published in Antwerp, Ghent and Bruges, on the pain of a 30 gulden fine." Foppens had now upheld his part of the bargain with the Privy Council, but there was no indication that the Antwerp, Bruges and Ghent courantiers took Foppens' threat seriously.

At the end of July 1674 a frustrated Foppens wrote directly to the King of Spain, pleading his case to the highest authority.<sup>18</sup> On this occasion Foppens included with his remonstrance an issue of the Ghendtsche Post-

17 The sixty surviving issues of the Waerachtigh Verhael contain a total of 570 news reports.

Tydinghen, which had published an inflammatory report on the rapid progress of Sweden's military preparations against the Habsburgs and their allies. Foppens noted that "this sort of writing causes unrest amongst the people, and discourages them."<sup>19</sup> An unregulated press, Foppens encouraged his superiors to appreciate, was a dangerous press.

The courantier would be disappointed. The Privy Council wrote once more to the magistrates of Antwerp, Bruges and Ghent, demanding that their courantiers cease publication of their newspapers, given Foppens' monopoly and the availability of a Flemish newspaper in Brussels. The magistrates of Bruges replied that they would attend to the matter at an unspecified future time; the magistrates of Ghent complained about the inappropriate legal form of the demand; and the magistrates of Antwerp did not reply at all.<sup>20</sup>

Defeated by this assertion of civic pride and bureaucratic obstinacy, the Waerachtigh Verhael came to an end. In December 1674 Foppens changed the imprint of the newspaper, removing the threat of a fine. The courantier clearly failed to break into the news market in the Flemish-speaking cities, where citizens were content to purchase their familiar local newspapers. It is likely that Foppens ceased the Waerachtigh Verhael at the end of 1674 or 1675; in 1676 the courantier declared to the Privy Council that he was no longer publishing a Flemish newspaper.<sup>21</sup>

What Foppens came to realise towards the end of his Flemish venture was that an expensive, cosmopolitan newspaper could not break through the barriers of regional and linguistic tradition. A larger quantity of news reports and a nicer typeface did not necessarily induce better sales. By the second half of the seventeenth century a newspaper had become a part of the civic culture of urban Flanders and Brabant. As the Ghent magistrates protested so vehemently, their local newspaper provided a public good in the community. This they would protect at all costs, and defend against the ambitions of centralising powers which threatened otherwise.

Utrechtse Courant

Utrecht, 1675–1700

On 2 November 1674 the Amsterdam publisher Broer Appelaer (1636–1690) received the exclusive right to print a newspaper in Utrecht.<sup>1</sup> This privilege, granted by the magistrates of Utrecht, was affirmed by a resolution of the States of Utrecht a month later, on 16 December. Since the banishment of Gerard Lodewijk van der Macht (c. 1622–1698) from Utrecht in 1669, the city had been without a local newspaper.<sup>2</sup> Appelaer knew this well—in his supplication submitted to the Utrecht regents he argued that a local paper would prove to be of great value to the citizens of the city.<sup>3</sup>

The time was ripe for a new Utrecht newspaper; not least because of the recent re-admission of the States of Utrecht to the union of the Dutch Republic. The province, and especially its capital city, had suffered an ignominious loss of esteem when it offered little resistance to the invading French army which occupied Utrecht in June 1672. By the end of 1673 the French troops had left the province, and only in 1674 were the regents of Utrecht allowed to take their seats at the States General once again. For the citizens of Utrecht this was a time of civic soul-searching. In this process the publication of a local newspaper represented a notable step towards the revival of the urban community.

Broer Appelaer was an opportunist publisher who could sense a suitable moment for a move from Amsterdam to Utrecht. But he could also appeal to his ancestral heritage, composed of two generations of newspaper publishers. Appelaer came from a true newspaper dynasty; his grandfather was the famous Broer Jansz (1579–1652), one of the first newspapermen in the Dutch Republic; and Appelaer's father, Joost Broersz (1608/1609–1647), had followed in the footsteps of Broer Jansz in the later 1630s. Broer Appelaer had a strong claim in a society where family connections and skills passed down generations was regarded as an assurance of merit. This was recognised by the Utrecht regents: Appelaer was granted a lifelong position as courantier.

The new Utrecht courantier had been active as a printer and bookseller in Amsterdam since 1661, when he was twenty-five years old.<sup>4</sup> His mother, Willemijntje Broersz (?–1661), had taken over the publication of the Ordinaris Dingsdaegsche Courante after the death of her husband in 1647, and it is likely that the young Broer Appelaer assisted her in the production of the paper.<sup>5</sup> When Willemijntje died in 1661, the rights to the newspaper were acquired by the stadsdrukker, Johannes (III) van Ravesteyn. For the next decade, Broer Appelaer was responsible primarily for devotional publications and Bibles, working in partnership with his younger brother Jan.<sup>6</sup> But clearly Broer had not forgotten the family heritage. On 16 April 1674 the brothers Appelaer sold off the typographical material and stock of their late father, Joost Broersz.<sup>7</sup> Broer undoubtedly used income from the sale for his move to Utrecht, while his brother stayed behind in Amsterdam to cultivate his existing trade in devotional literature.

The first issue of the Utrechtse Courant appeared on Friday 25 January 1675. The newspaper appeared twice a week, on Tuesdays and Fridays, but from 1677 on Mondays and Fridays. The newspaper has suffered a very high rate of loss—only 201 issues can be found today, around 7% of the likely total number published up to 1700. Most of the surviving issues date from 1677 and 1678, and can be found in the Noord-Hollands Archief in Haarlem (137 issues). Others survive in smaller numbers in The Hague, Amsterdam, Utrecht, Ghent, Leiden, Moscow, Stockholm, Dublin, Groningen, Kew and Wolfenbüttel.

Appelaer had an unsettled career in Utrecht. He moved the location of his shop four times between his arrival in 1674 and his death in 1690. He could first be found on the Lijnmarkt; from 1681 on the Nieuwe Gracht near the Wittevrouwebrug; from 1684 on the corner of the Balle-makerstraat; from 1686 on the Neude; and from 1687 on the Oude Gracht, near the Jacobibrug. From May 1678 onwards the shop sign of Appelaer's premises was “the Courant”—a clear indication of his profession. In Utrecht Appelaer seems to have focused almost exclusively on the news trade. Whereas he was deeply involved in the trade in devotional books in Amsterdam, in Utrecht he published only his newspaper, occasional news pamphlets and the dissertations of local university students.

The Utrechtse Courant was published as a quarto pamphlet of four unnumbered pages. While it used the same quantity of paper as rival newspapers in Haarlem and Amsterdam (a half-sheet), the Utrechtse Courant was folded as a booklet, rather than presented in the standard form of Dutch newspapers as a double-sided unfolded folio leaf. Previous Utrecht newspapers had appeared as similar quarto pamphlets; perhaps Appelaer was maintaining this local tradition. The news reports were presented in double columns on each page, but advertisements were generally placed horizontally across both columns on the final page of the newspaper. A woodcut emblem of the States of Utrecht featured proudly on the first page of every issue.

Broer Appelaer was sparing in his use of paper; he left only narrow margins, and was able to fit in over 3,000 words per issue. This was very different from the newspapers of his father and grandfather, whose issues in the 1630s and 1640s usually contained around 2,000 words. But newspapers had changed in the second half of the seventeenth century, and so had expectations of their content and coverage of international affairs. Notwithstanding Broer Appelaer's efforts, his Utrechtse Courant struggled to compete with the dominant titles in Haarlem and Amsterdam, and from 1686 onwards in Leiden.<sup>8</sup>

Broer Appelaer's three rivals appeared as tri-weekly ventures, whereas the Utrechtse Courant appeared only twice a week. The tri-weeklies had at their service a wider network of correspondence, and offered to their readers a more diverse digest of news. Broer Appelaer seems to have invested a significant amount in his network of correspondents at the start of his career as courantier: the issues of the Utrechtse Courant from the later 1670s regularly contain over twenty reports, and offer extensive coverage of the final stages of the Franco-Dutch War (1672–1678). But by the 1680s and 1690s the number of sources in the Utrechtse Courant had dropped to an average of thirteen or fourteen per issue—while its rivals often contained twenty-five reports. Almost every single issue of the Utrechtse Courant featured reports from Paris and The Hague, and usually from Vienna, Hamburg, Cologne, Strasbourg, London and Brussels; but the newspaper had much weaker connections further afield. Reports from the Baltic, Italy, Spain and Portugal are comparatively rare.

The Utrechtse Courant was less popular with advertisers than its competitors. The surviving issues of the newspaper featured 149 advertisements and 73 public announcements—on average just over one advertisement or public announcements per issue.<sup>9</sup> In 1690, the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant contained an average of three advertisements or public announcements per issue.<sup>10</sup> The majority of advertisements in the Utrechtse Courant were placed by local tradesmen, and many of the public announcements were appeals for information from local inhabitants. The Utrecht newspaper was certainly available outside Utrecht: on 5 May 1692 an advertisement in the paper stated that “the Utrechtse Courant is available in Amsterdam with the widow of Jochem van Dijk and the widow of Adriaen Gaesbeeck.”<sup>11</sup> Nevertheless, the core audience for the newspaper was in Utrecht and its immediate surroundings.

Shortly after beginning his newspaper in Utrecht Broer Appelaer found himself in a prolonged public spat with Abraham Casteleyn (1628–1681), the publisher of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant and the most formidable newsman of the Dutch Republic.<sup>12</sup> On two occasions the Haarlem courantier printed derisive comments about Broer Appelaer in his newspaper, a rare practice for the otherwise decorous Casteleyn. On 2 February 1677 Casteleyn ended his newspaper by stating that “the Utrecht courantier ... who speaks of affairs of which he knows nothing, does not merit a response.”<sup>13</sup> While we do not know what caused this dispute, it certainly lasted for several years. Two years later, on 11 July 1679, Casteleyn told his subscribers that “the reader should not expect an answer to the insults of the Utrecht courantier, for he does not merit an answer.”<sup>14</sup> Unfortunately there is no trace of the issues of Broer Appelaer's paper in which these allegedly derogatory comments appeared.

Appelaer's conflict with Casteleyn was unfortunate, and hints at rivalry between the newsmen. But the Utrecht courantier suffered more considerable problems during the 1680s. Broer Appelaer received a stream of complaints from various Dutch and German regents regarding the inaccuracy of his news reports: the magistrates of Cologne complained to the Utrecht city council on three occasions in the 1680s; so did the magistrates of Lübeck, the magistrates of Amsterdam and the States of Holland.<sup>15</sup> These persistent criticisms can only have been an additional burden on the strains of the courantier's life. Broer Appelaer died in late June 1690, only days after he had heard that the magistrates of Utrecht had banned his Utrechtse Courant from publication. The magistrates of Amsterdam had been enraged by their supposed defamation in the newspaper, and the Utrecht regents had appeased them with the suspension of their courantier on 23 June.<sup>16</sup>

On 7 July 1690 the children of Broer Appelaer appealed to the magistrates to revoke the ban. Perhaps compelled by Appelaer's death, the magistrates consented, and the publication of the Utrechtse Courant continued, without obvious changes. The children of Appelaer maintained their father's name on the newspaper until 1711, when the bookseller Nicholas Chevalier gained the right to publish the newspaper.<sup>17</sup>

NB.

The ban handed out by the magistrates of Utrecht will have affected the publication of issues numbers 50–54 of the Utrechtse Courant in 1690. It seems that the heirs of Broer Appelaer resumed the sequence of publication with number 55 on 10 July 1690 once the ban was lifted.

Uytgesochte Nieuwe Tydingen 1684

In the early 1680s Dutch politics was dominated by a debate concerning the size of the army.<sup>1</sup> This was an issue that placed Stadhouder William III, Captain-General of the armed forces, in opposition to the leading magistrates of the major Dutch cities, including Amsterdam. In 1683 French aggression in the Southern Netherlands prompted fears of a recurrence of the disaster year of 1672, when the Dutch Republic was overrun by the armies of France, Münster and Cologne. Before 1672 the Dutch army had been starved of resources and left in an altogether pitiful state. In the ensuing war, which lasted until 1678, the army was built up once more; but many of the commercially-minded oligarchs, who dominated the provincial assemblies, considered a large standing army an excessive expense.

Debate was not restricted to the chambers of office or the private correspondence of magistrates; in 1683 and 1684 the Dutch Republic was awash with printed speeches, letters, extracts of resolutions, satirical verse and poetry. After the political crises of 1617–1618, 1650 and 1672, this was the most intense period of pamphleteering in the seventeenth-century Dutch Republic (and certainly today the least well known).<sup>2</sup> In 1684, according to one pamphleteer, one could hear conversations in bookshops “regarding affairs of state argued with greater conviction and opinion than the lords regents would dare themselves.”<sup>3</sup>

It is no surprise that this frenzy of popular print was accompanied by the publication of a new newspaper, the Uytgesochte Nieuwe Tydingen (Assorted new tidings). At the start of 1684 there were only three Dutch titles available in the country: the tri-weekly Oprechte Haerlemse Courant and Amsterdamsche Courant, and the bi-weekly Utrechtse Courant.<sup>4</sup> There would not be a Dutch newspaper in Leiden for another two years, and bi-weekly newspapers published in Rotterdam and The Hague had disappeared in the later 1660s and 1670s.

The earliest surviving example of the weekly Uytgesochte Nieuwe Tydingen dates from Saturday 4 March, and the last dates from Saturday 19 August. Twenty-one issues (including one variant) are known for the intervening period—a few are found in Leiden and Amsterdam, but unusually the majority survive only in private collections.<sup>5</sup>

The Uytgesochte Nieuwe Tydingen was not a conventional newspaper. While it appeared as a half-sheet folio in double columns, it was printed on one side only, and was unnumbered. The newspaper did not feature dated headlines listing the origin and date of each news report. All issues were divided into ten or a dozen paragraphs. In contrast to other Dutch newspapers, which presented news from the perspective of their correspondents, the news in the Uytgesochte Nieuwe Tydingen was written from the perspective of the editor or publisher, who provided the reader with an analysis of various letters, rather than offer the letters in their original (or extracted) form. For example, in the issue of 15 April the editor mused that “those of Gelderland, Utrecht and Overijssel, naturally so watchful for the armies of Denmark and Cologne ... have come to desire the troops paid at their expense back in these provinces.”<sup>6</sup> A little further down the column this report was followed by the statement that “Meanwhile, the envoy of His Majesty the King of Denmark, so it is said, has not been able to achieve his mission at the Polish court ....”<sup>7</sup> In the issue of 27 May the publisher shone some light on his alternative editorial practice: “the continuous and daily new tidings, which I have received from all corners, have obliged me to be shorter this time.”<sup>8</sup>

The scope of news included in the Uytgesochte Nieuwe Tydingen was extensive. It included reports from Great Britain, France, Italy, the Baltic States and the Holy Roman Empire. Crucially, an unusually large proportion of news in the Uytgesochte Nieuwe Tydingen concerned domestic affairs: resolutions or discussions of the regional States, the comings and goings of dignitaries, official audiences, and letters and speeches by Dutch officials.

This concentration on domestic news, which often strayed into content from which more established newspapers would steer clear, may explain the anonymity of the publisher of the Uytgesochte Nieuwe Tydingen. No imprint can be found on any issues, nor is there a hint of the publisher's location. Given the impressive range of foreign and domestic news, it is possible that the newspaper was published in The Hague: an ideal centre for the composition and dissemination of such a politically-charged serial, and, at this point, a large town without a local newspaper. The publisher may have chosen not to reveal his identity, but he was certainly well-connected in official circles.

On 15 July the publisher announced that "due to an intervening obstruction this venture was paused for eight days, although it will now continue as before."<sup>9</sup> This reassurance to his readers seems to suggest that the publisher of the Uytgesochte Nieuwe Tydingen intended to maintain the serial. However, it is unlikely that the newspaper lasted much beyond the autumn of 1684, when the height of the political crisis passed. The style of the Uytgesochte Nieuwe Tydingen was suited particularly to the media frenzy of 1684, when it could offer a unique political digest amidst the maelstrom of topical publications. With different editorial principles, the publisher could stand out from the many pamphlets which reproduced word-for-word the speeches or resolutions of regents in Holland, Overijssel or Friesland. The cloak of anonymity also assured the publisher that the potentially incendiary reports of confidential political discussion would prove more difficult to trace.

When the storm died down, the Uytgesochte Nieuwe Tydingen could no longer be sustained. Its greatest source of news—the political debate—had disappeared. Commercially, it would be difficult to compete with the other newspapers in circulation: a weekly newspaper of 1,400 words was at a distinct disadvantage measured against tri-weekly newspapers offering over 3,000 words per issue. The financial investment required to furnish this larger quantity of news had tied the established Dutch courantiërs closer to municipal powerbrokers, on whom they relied to protect their investments. At the same time magistrates throughout the country took a greater interest in the regulation of the newspaper, by now a significant source of political information. The anonymous proprietor of the Uytgesochte Nieuwe Tydingen, with his alternative editorial methods, would be hard-pressed to keep himself on the right side of the law.

NB.

On at least two occasions (2 and 23 July) issues of the Uytgesochte Nieuwe Tydingen were published on Sundays rather than Saturdays.

Opregte Leydse Courant Leiden, 1686–1700

Leiden was one of the great cities of the Dutch Republic. Located at the heart of urban Holland, Leiden was the most populous city in the country after Amsterdam, the foremost scholarly centre of the Dutch Republic and an international beacon of Protestant learning. It was also the second centre of the Dutch book trade and an important hub for the cloth trade. Leiden was in many respects a perfect location for the publication of a newspaper. Yet the first Dutch newspaper to be published in Leiden appeared only in 1686—by which point Dutch newspapers had already appeared in Amsterdam, Arnhem, Delft, Utrecht, The Hague, Weesp, Haarlem and Rotterdam. Throughout the century the supply of newspapers from Amsterdam, Haarlem and The Hague (all well connected to Leiden by barge) ensured that the citizens of Leiden had easy access to competing titles. The booksellers of Leiden, dedicated to scholarly endeavours, had little interest in challenging these ventures in the news market.

This changed on Saturday 30 March 1686, when the printer-publisher Daniel van Gaesbeeck (1634–1693) presented the first issue of the Ordinaris Leidse Courant. Van Gaesbeeck had been granted the right to publish a Dutch newspaper by the magistrates of Leiden two weeks earlier.<sup>1</sup> After a few issues Van Gaesbeeck settled for the title Ordinaire Leydse Courant. The newspaper appeared as a folded quarto pamphlet of four unnumbered pages, signed consecutively throughout; this was the same style used by the Utrechtse Courant, and by most newspapers in the Holy Roman Empire and France. A prominent woodcut emblem of the city of Leiden adorned the first page of the newspaper.

Van Gaesbeeck, located at the city's most elegant address, the Rapenburg, had been active in the Leiden book world since 1655, during which time he had focused exclusively on the scholarly trade. Before 1686 Van Gaesbeeck had published over 160 titles, of which only a few were vernacular publications; the remainder were academic disputations, works of Latin philosophy, histories, editions of the classics and medical tracts.<sup>2</sup> Van Gaesbeeck's diversification into the news industry was most likely stimulated by the death of his brother, Adriaen (I) van Gaesbeeck (1641–1686), on 8 February 1686. Adriaen had been the publisher of the Amsterdamsche Courant since 1682, and the brothers had worked together on a variety of projects in Amsterdam and Leiden in the past decades.<sup>3</sup> Now Daniel sought to continue the family's engagement in the newspaper trade, albeit in Leiden.

It is probable that Daniel van Gaesbeeck was able to benefit from some of his brother's former connections as courantier. Daniel van Gaesbeeck was the first newspaper publisher to start with a tri-weekly schedule of publication—his Leiden newspaper appeared on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.<sup>4</sup> This was a venture which required significant investment in a network of correspondents and distributors. Moreover, Van Gaesbeeck's newspaper was the first in the Dutch Republic to feature an advertisement in the very first issue; the second and third issues even featured multiple advertisements. This was unusual, given that newspapermen generally had to build up a reputation and a distribution network before customers were willing to place advertisements. In all likelihood Daniel van Gaesbeeck contacted former correspondents and distributors of Adriaen's Amsterdamsche Courant in order to build a sustainable foundation. Nevertheless, Daniel found it appropriate to mention to the reader of the first issue that his “news would expand and improve”, as not all correspondence had arrived in time for publication.<sup>5</sup>

Despite his family connections, Daniel van Gaesbeeck did not last long as courantier. On 9 August 1686, after four months of publication, Van Gaesbeeck sold the rights of the Leiden newspaper to Lodewijck vander Saen (c. 1655–?); on 13 August the imprint of the newspaper reflected this change.<sup>6</sup> Little is known of this second publisher: originally from Hungary, Vander Saen registered in 1678 as a twenty-three year old student of philosophy at Leiden University, having arrived from Mannheim. In 1678 Vander Saen lived at the house of the postmaster of the city, Nicolas Clignet.<sup>7</sup>

It is uncertain why Van Gaesbeeck sold the rights to his paper. Perhaps he underestimated the efforts required to publish a tri-weekly. In any case, he continued to participate in the venture as the printer of the newspaper. Under Vander Saen's editorship the Leiden newspaper underwent various changes. At the start of 1687 the title of the newspaper was changed to the Oprechte Leydse Courant, and the newspaper now appeared as an unfolded double-sided folio leaf, rather than the quarto pamphlet format. Vander Saen opted for the more conventional style of the Haarlem and Amsterdam newspapers—the most prominent newspapers available at the time. Furthermore, Vander Saen changed the schedule of publication from Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday (the schedules of the Haarlem and Amsterdam newspapers) to Monday, Wednesday and Friday. This change occurred at the end of March, when he restarted the numbering sequence. This was a shrewd adjustment, which will undoubtedly have strengthened the position of the Oprechte Leydse Courant in the national market. On Mondays and Fridays Vander Saen only competed with the bi-weekly Utrechtse Courant—he had Wednesdays all to himself. The prosperous and inquisitive Dutch reader could now have access to a newspaper six days each week, and two newspapers on five days of every week.

There is one curiosity regarding Vander Saen's time as publisher: the first issue of 1687 was stated to have been printed by Adriaen van Gaesbeeck, rather than Daniel. This Adriaen may have been Daniel's son.<sup>8</sup> Strangely, the other two surviving issues of 1687, dated from 10 and 17 September, list Daniel van Gaesbeeck as printer once more. It is possible that the young Adriaen assisted in Daniel's shop, or that Daniel delegated the print work to his son, but this arrangement seems to have lasted only briefly.

No issues of the Oprechte Leydse Courant survive for 1688 and 1689. The newspaper has suffered a relatively high attrition rate for a tri-weekly: only 30% of the probable total number of issues published (700 out of 2,350) can be traced today, compared to 80% for the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant and 65% for the Amsterdamsche Courant. Furthermore, almost every single issue of the Leiden newspaper is a unique survivor—only thirty-five issues survive in two copies.

In 1689 the Oprechte Leydse Courant changed hands once more. Jacob van Huysduynen (fl. 1689–1719) was appointed as courantier by the magistrates on 15 December 1689.<sup>9</sup> Nothing is known about Jacob van Huysduynen before his arrival as courantier; and no other publications apart from the Oprechte Leydse Courant have survived from his press. Although he continued to publish the newspaper until his death in 1719, Van Huysduynen is a truly elusive figure. Sautijn Kluit states that Van Huysduynen was mentioned in 1693 on a list of 150 Leiden notables, lawyers, preachers and professors who received an exemption from local excise.<sup>10</sup> We also know that Van Huysduynen owned only one printing press; unlike his rivals in Haarlem and Amsterdam, who printed their newspapers on two presses.<sup>11</sup>

While the new publisher maintained the unfolded folio format introduced by Lodewijck vander Saen, Van Huysduynen did not initially number his issues. At first sight this seems to be a strange development; numbered issues were a standard feature of most newspapers throughout Europe, and numbering was adopted by all Dutch newspapers from 1629 onwards. Perhaps Van Huysduynen was following the lead of the Amsterdamsche Courant, which removed its numbering in 1689 and 1690. Sequential numbering encouraged readers to subscribe, to buy regularly in order to follow events systematically, and to bind issues together at the end of the year. Removing this feature may have been intended to place a greater emphasis on the casual purchase of individual issues, and encourage occasional impulse buying.

The survival of the Oprechte Leydse Courant under Van Huysduynen certainly suggests that readers were happy to purchase issues on a casual basis, or to subscribe to only one issue each week. Almost all surviving issues published by Van Huysduynen are Monday issues. There are two near-complete runs of Monday issues, preserved in the municipal archives in Leiden (1690–1695) and the Koninklijke Bibliotheek in The Hague (1696–1700)—a total of 499 issues. Given the absence of overlap between these two series, it is likely that both came from the same original collection. In comparison, only thirty-three Friday issues and forty-six Wednesday issues have survived, mostly in collections outside the Netherlands.

The discrepancy in the survival of the Monday, Wednesday and Friday issues renders a full comparison of contents impossible. But one can still perceive some subtle differences and similarities. Almost every issue contained around 3,500 words, similar to Amsterdam and Haarlem papers of the same period. But the diversity of reports in the Opregte Leydse Courant differed greatly throughout the year. In winter and spring months the issues of the Opregte Leydse Courant sometimes only featured seven or eight reports; often a couple of reports from the Holy Roman Empire, London, Paris, Brussels and two or three domestic reports. In summer and autumn, when campaigning was underway in many of Europe's regions, and the weather was more conducive to frequent postal despatches, the Opregte Leydse Courant featured three times this number. In summer Van Huysduynen often found space to add a large sequence of short reports from across the Holy Roman Empire, Italy and France at the end of an issue, which arrived just in time for the printing of the newspaper.

It seems that Wednesday issues were more likely to feature reports from Portugal, Spain and Poland, whereas Friday issues often contained multiple reports from Italy. Monday issues concentrated on the whole on British and French news, but featured far fewer reports from the Mediterranean. Reports from Paris, Brussels and The Hague featured in nearly every surviving issue. By the final years of the century almost every single Leiden issue included two reports from Amsterdam and two reports from The Hague, dated respectively from two days and one day before publication.

One of the distinguishing features of Van Huysduynen's network of correspondents was his extensive coverage of British affairs. The Glorious Revolution and the subsequent Anglo-Dutch alliance against France stimulated an intensive cultural and political exchange between the Dutch Republic and the British Isles; this also affected the news industry, as greater demands were placed on the dissemination of information between the allied states, and the rapid provision of news from the battlefield in Ireland and Parliamentary debate in London. Van Huysduynen was at the forefront of the supply of news from the British Isles. The Monday issues of the Opregte Leydse Courant featured regular reports from major British centres, such as London and Edinburgh, but also a large range of maritime towns along the south and east coast of England, and across Ireland and Scotland. Van Huysduynen clearly invested significantly in his network of British correspondents. It is unlikely that reports from Falmouth, Plymouth, Dartmouth, Weymouth, Portsmouth, Deal, and so forth, which frequently follow in sequence in the same issue, all came from separate correspondents: most likely a single individual had gathered up news from these places. But Van Huysduynen had certainly found good men for the task: his British correspondents often despatched successive letters on a daily basis. Some issues were almost entirely dedicated to reports from the British Isles, with three, four or five letters from the same city. On Monday 25 April 1695 the Opregte Leydse Courant contained three reports from Kinsale and one from Dublin, five from Edinburgh and seven from London. Two reports from The Hague provided the only non-British material in the issue.

Van Huysduynen's connections in the British Isles and close coverage of the region eventually ran him into trouble. The Opregte Leydse Courant was banned from publication by the Leiden magistrates on 17 December 1693.<sup>12</sup> The magistrates had received a letter from King William III instructing them to suspend Van Huysduynen, after the courantier had repeatedly published what he describes as seditious reports on British affairs (frustratingly, he provides no further details). While the magistrates dutifully obliged their Stadhouder, they soon allowed their courantier to resume publication. By 21 June 1694 the Opregte Leydse Courant continued as before.

At the start of 1697 Van Huysduynen reintroduced the consecutive numbering of the Opregte Leydse Courant. In 1698 he introduced a further—visually pleasing—change: the datelines of the places of correspondence were set in a full capital roman typeface, providing the reader with a visual guide through the densely-set small roman type.

Van Huysduynen was certainly not content to serve the local Leiden market only. On 12 June 1690 he specified that the Opregte Leydse Courant could also be purchased in Amsterdam at the shop of the widow of Pieter Arentsz. Similar statements continued to crop up in the imprint of the newspaper in 1692, 1694 and 1698. In that final year the Amsterdam bookseller Cornelis vander Sys was also mentioned as an official distributor.

By the 1690s the Opregte Leydse Courant occupied a middling position in the newspaper industry. It was clearly a cut above the bi-weekly Utrechtse Courant, which was largely aimed at a smaller, local readership. On average the Opregte Leydse Courant featured more than double the number of advertisements and public announcements of the Utrechtse Courant, and the Leiden paper could certainly reach a wider clientele in the book trade and commercial sectors than was the case for the Utrecht paper.<sup>13</sup> However, the Opregte Leydse Courant could not match its rivals in Haarlem and Amsterdam in the number of its reports and advertisements; and its one-press production ensured that it could not be read as far and wide as its competitors, which employed two printing presses. It was important for Jacob van Huysduynen to develop a specialism—intensive coverage of British affairs—to add a distinguishing quality to the Leiden newspaper.

The Opregte Leydse Courant remained in the hands of Jacob van Huysduynen until his death in 1719, when the rights of publication were purchased by Felix de Klopper.<sup>14</sup> On this occasion De Klopper was required to pay 1,000 gulden—a significant sum—to the Leiden magistrates.<sup>15</sup> The local regents clearly knew how to benefit from a successful local venture.

In 1699 Van Huysduynen skipped numbers 86–90 in the sequence.

Antwerpsche Post-Tijdinge

Antwerp, 1691–1700

The survival of Antwerp newspapers in the second half of the seventeenth century is extremely poor. While two bi-weekly newspapers appeared from 1635 until at least 1678, only twenty-two issues have survived between 1651 and 1678.<sup>1</sup> One of these ventures, the newspaper of the Binart family, seems to have disappeared shortly afterwards. The other, the Extraordinarisse Post-tijdinghe of the Verdussen family, surfaces once again in 1691, rebranded as the Antwerpsche Post-Tijdinge.

Not a single issue of this bi-weekly Antwerp newspaper survives between 1674 and 1690 (during which time close to 2,000 issues will have been published). Thanks to archival documentation we can be sure that the Verdussen family continued to publish their bi-weekly newspaper throughout this period.<sup>2</sup> Less certain is the exact date of the transformation from the Extraordinarisse Post-tijdinghe to the Antwerpsche Post-Tijdinge. I have therefore chosen to indicate the start of the Antwerpsche Post-Tijdinge in the year of the first surviving issue, dated from 28 August 1691.

When Peter Verdussen, eldest son of Willem Verdussen, died in 1677, the Extraordinarisse Post-tijdinghe was taken over by his younger brother Hendrik (1632–1684); upon his death the business was run by Clara (1623–1695) and Maria Verdussen (1618–1691), sisters of Peter and Hendrik.<sup>3</sup> The sisters lived in the same premises where their brothers and their father had published their newspaper: “De X Geboden” (The Ten Commandments). It was here that they printed the issues of the Antwerpsche Post-Tijdinge; Maria died in 1691, but Clara continued to publish the newspaper until her death in January 1695.

Only four issues of the Antwerpsche Post-Tijdinge have survived between 1691 and 1695.<sup>4</sup> The newspaper appeared every Tuesday and Friday, published as a folded pamphlet of four pages (a half-sheet in quarto), with reports set in double columns; this was in contrast to the format of the Extraordinarisse Post-tijdinghe, which had appeared as a double-sided leaf (a half-sheet in folio). The title was accompanied by two small woodcut emblems: one displaying the coat of arms of Antwerp, the other a woodcut emblem of Moses holding the Ten Commandments, together with the initials “PVD” for Peter Verdussen. This was not the only sign of brotherly affection maintained by the sisters. The colophon of the Antwerpsche Post-Tijdinge stated that it was published by “H.I. Verdussen”. It is possible that the sisters either maintained Hendrik Verdussen’s name on the newspaper after his death, or that they used the names of their two younger brothers, Hieronymus (IV) and Jacob.<sup>5</sup> Perhaps Hieronymus and Jacob were involved in the financing of the paper; or the sisters simply did not see fit to issue the periodical under their own names.

When Clara Verdussen died in 1695 the license of the newspaper was purchased by Hendrik (III) Aertssens (1661–1741).<sup>6</sup> Aertssens was a distant relation: he was the nephew of Hieronymus (III) Verdussen, a cousin of Clara and her siblings. Aertssens had had his eye on the newspaper for a while: already in 1692 he had petitioned the Antwerp magistrates to take it over. On 4 February 1695 Aertssens officially bought the licence from Jacob Verdussen, by this point the only surviving sibling of the former courantiers.

Hendrik Aertssens had initially followed in the footsteps of his step-father, Lucas de Potter, specialising in the publication of musical part-books.<sup>7</sup> The purchase of the Antwerpsche Post-Tijdinge in 1695 was a change of direction, but Aertssens would embrace his role as courantier, publishing the newspaper until his death in 1741 and devoting the rest of his career to the news trade.<sup>8</sup>

No issues of the Antwerpsche Post-Tijdinge published by Aertssens have survived for the period between 1695 and 1699. However, a near-complete volume of the newspaper for the year 1700 (103 out of 105 issues) can be found in the Erfgoedbibliotheek in Antwerp. This volume was collected contemporaneously by a subscriber; the issues still display marks of double folding, suggesting that the issues were despatched by post from Antwerp.

Under the tenure of Aertssens the Antwerpsche Post-Tijdinge underwent relatively few structural changes. The emblem of the Verdussen family was replaced by Aertssens' personal emblem: a woodcut featuring Mount Parnassus with the Thriae (the three nymphs of the mountain) and Pegasus. The emblem was a reference to Aertssens' shop, located on the Eiermarkt, called "Mount Parnassus". The Antwerpsche Post-Tijdinge was on the whole beautifully set—Aertssens used large capital type-faces for the datelines of the reports, and often included large woodcut initials on the front page.

The survival of almost all issues published in 1700 creates a picture of a stable periodical venture, supported by a sizeable network of correspondents. Throughout 1700 the Antwerpsche Post-Tijdinge featured on average fourteen or fifteen news reports per issue; this was not as impressive as the range of scope of newspapers in Haarlem, Amsterdam and Leiden, but it reflected a significant effort of news gathering. Nearly every issue carried reports from Warsaw and Vienna (often twice); on Tuesdays Aertssens supplied news from Spain, London and the Holy Roman Empire; and on Fridays from Italy, usually opening with Rome, three or four reports from the Baltic, and news from France. These reports appeared with regularity. This is not least evident from two occasions in 1700, when Aertssens was left waiting for a report from London which did not arrive in time for publication. Issue 34 of 27 April and issue 69 of 27 August include datelines "from London" with ample space left blank underneath for the expected report. It is possible that the surviving issues came off the press early in the day, and that the reports arrived later, only for the printing to be halted and the blank space to be filled in. If so, these variants have not survived.

Compared to Dutch newspapers in 1700 the Antwerpsche Post-Tijdinge contained few advertisements. The 103 Antwerp issues contain a total of fifty-five advertisements and another twenty public announcements; in the same year the 156 issues of the Oprechte Haerlemse Courant contained 845 advertisements and 473 public announcements.<sup>9</sup> While advertising took off in the Dutch Republic in the 1620s, Southern courantiere and their readers had never been as eager to adopt the practice. Even in the second half of the seventeenth century advertising seems to have developed slowly: the 442 surviving issues of the Ghendtsche Post-Tydingen published between 1667 and 1700 contain only seventy-seven advertisements and fourteen public announcements.<sup>10</sup>

By 1700 the number and scope of advertisements in the Antwerpsche Post-Tijdinge reflect the widening appeal of the Flemish newspaper.<sup>11</sup> In 1700 the reader could find advertisements for books; public lotteries; auctions and the sale of paintings; cloth-presses and other industrial machinery; and announcements concerning wanted criminals and annual markets. Significantly, the advertisements for lotteries were for events in both the Habsburg Netherlands and in the Dutch Republic, suggesting that the mania for gambling easily crossed national boundaries. This aspect of this sturdy bi-weekly would continue to develop into the eighteenth century. The Antwerp press had a rich history of political reporting stretching back to Abraham Verhoeven; now the newspaper would come to play a prominent role in the commerce of Antwerp and the daily lives of its citizens.
